This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. PREFACE.

THE ANNUAL AMERICAN CATALOGUE, begun with the present volume for 1886, is intended to complete the system of trade bibliography of the office of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, of which the AMERICAN CATALOGUE of 1876 and the successive volumes planned to succeed it at five-yearly intervals are the crown, and the weekly record and monthly indexes of that periodical the original material. The connecting link of an ANNUAL CATALOGUE has been much asked for, in place of the make-shift of two half-years hitherto given in the PUBLISHERS' TRADE LIST ANNUAL, but, despite its practical usefulness in the book-store and the library, there was much doubt as to whether the demand, translated into dollars and cents, would justify the cost of its supply. The advance subscriptions for the present volume were enough to justify the experiment of its issue; whether the ANNUAL CATALOGUE shall continue will depend upon the further demand the sale of the present publication shall show.

The body of this catalogue is a reproduction in alphabetical order of the full titles with descriptive notes given in the weekly record of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY during the year 1886, numbering above 4500 entries. The cost of re-setting these would have been prohibitive, but the new and cheap photographic processes have come to our aid. This catalogue was made by carefully pasting upon cardboard pages the actual slips cut from the record, and re-arranged alphabetically, by author or (in the case of anonyms) by title. Both the planning and practical execution of this part of the work are to be put to the credit of Mr. A. Growoll, of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY. The process used is that of the Lithographoid Engraving and Printing Co., New York, in which the cost of metal is altogether saved by printing direct from the hardened gelatine plate. The record of titles, with the descriptive notes, is chiefly the work of Miss M. M. Monachesi.

The index, covering about 10,000 entries, is the short-title record of the same books by author, title, and subject, containing in the author-entry the date of the weekly record in which it first appeared, which is approximately a key to the date of publication. This was re-compiled from the twelve monthly indexes, and the considerable cost of re-setting could not in the present instance be avoided. This index, it will be noted, answers almost every question that can be asked in searching for a book, by author, title, general or special subject, or date.

Some books really issued in 1885 are necessarily included in these lists, and per contra some books really issued in 1886 were not reported and recorded until past the turn of the year. So far as these latter were traced up in connection with the Annual Summary Number of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, though they could not be given in the main catalogue, they are included in a supplementary index, entered in short title by author, title, and subject, and more full particulars will generally be found in the annual lists of leading publishers appended as a further useful feature of this volume.

The list of publishers preceding the main catalogue, numbering 517, forms a practical directory to the American publishers really issuing books. If from this number is subtracted newspaper offices, printers, and individuals who publish books only incidentally and occasionally, the list of live American publishers scarcely reaches 200.

No one appreciates so fully as the bibliographer himself the difficulties and imperfections of any work of bibliography; and it is seldom that any other obtains a realizing sense of the great cost at which such work must be done if it is to be done at all well. Accuracy means patience, and patience means time, and time means money. The American Catalogue of 1876, for instance, showed on the 31st of December, 1886, an outlay of $27,622.46, without counting interest or the personal services of its editor, and the total income, all the sets having been sold, a considerable number at more than double the original price, had reached but $27,321.21. And even the painstaking and consequent delay which this large outlay represented did not succeed in fulfilling the ideal of its founder. It is frankly admitted that this ANNUAL CATALOGUE is by no means a complete and perfect record of the books published in America in 1886, though continuous advertising, persistent circulars and individual letters, research among a wide range of exchanges, and all the resources of a thoroughly organized bibliographical office have been used to induce publishers to report fully each of their issues. The copyright records, indeed, show a deposit of 8352 so-called books in the calendar year 1886, while the entries of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY were 4676, many of these being books imported in editions and non-copyright, but of the apparent discrepancy a great part are scarcely to be counted books at all or are the trash of the "penny dreadful" series, of which neither library nor book-store, properly speaking, take account. Of books that are books there are not many serious omissions in this catalogue, which probably covers 99 per cent. of books generally sold and read, and is complete as respects the issues of the great body of the book-trade. Nevertheless there remains in the copyright records and elsewhere a considerable number of titles which we should gladly record, and the persistent offers of this office to make public, in whole or in part, in a systematic manner, the titles now hidden in the Copyright Office, may ultimately be of effect. Each year the record grows more and more approximately complete, though each year there is the corresponding disadvantage of increased cost. If the practical demand for such a publication as this on the part of the book-trade, libraries, and others interested, justifies the continuance of an ANNUAL CATALOGUE, that support will render it more possible to make our entire bibliographical system and method more and more comprehensive and complete, until we can fairly claim for the AMERICAN CATALOGUE and its ancillary system the credit of being a full record of American book-production and of holding its own with the national bibliography of other nations.

ANNUAL AMERICAN CATALOGUE, 1886

Full Titles by Authors

NOTE.

In this list the titles generally are verbatim transcriptions (according to the rule of the American Library Association) from books received. Books not received are indicated by a prefixed asterisk, and this office cannot be held responsible for the correctness of their record.

The abbreviations are usually self-explanatory. A colon after initial designates the most usual given name, as: A: Augustus; B: Benjamin; C: Charles; D: David; E: Edward; F: Frederic; G: George; H: Henry; I: Isaac; J: John; L: Louis; N: Nicholas; P: Peter; R: Richard; S: Samuel; T: Thomas; W: William.

Sizes are designated as follows: F. (folio: over 30 centimeters high); (Q. 4to: under 30cm.); O (8vo: 25cm.); D. (12mo: 20 cm.); S. (16mo: 17½ cm.); T. (24mo: 15cm.); Tt. (32mo: 12½ cm.); Fe. (48mo: 10cm.). Sq., obl., nar., designate square, oblong, narrow books of these heights.

THE ANNUAL AMERICAN CATALOGUE, 1886

Of Books recorded Jan 1 to December 31, 1886, with full titles and descriptive notes, arranged alphabetically by authors.

---

*Abarbanel's reader, for the use of Israelites, in schools and families. Cin., The Bloch Pub. & Print. Co., 1885. 450 p. S. cl., $1.

Abiding; comp. by the editor of "Rest" and "Peace." N. Y., A. D. F. Randolph & Co., [1886.] 4+129 p. Fe. cl., 35 c

Collection of sacred poems; a miniature volume, very daintily gotten up.

Abbott, C: C., M.D. Upland and meadow: a Poaetquissings chronicle. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 9+397 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The unpronounceable Indian name in the title belongs to a little stream that empties into the Delaware river on the New Jersey side. Its banks and neighboring valleys are rich in animal and vegetable life, and its waters full of curious fishes. Indian relics also abound in the fields adjacent, and are rich hunting-grounds for the archæologist. This pleasant volume records the author's daily rambles through "upland and meadow," and affords to those interested in such subjects a great deal of valuable information. Many curious adventures and little personal episodes enliven the narrative.

Abbott, Lyman. In aid of faith. N. Y., E. P. Dutton & Co., 1886. 3–188 p. D. cl., $1.

"The title of this book indicates its purpose. It is written in order to give aid to those who desire to hold fast to their faith, but find intellectual and moral difficulties in so doing. . . . It is not so much an attempt to prove the truths of Christianity by logical processes, as to state them in thinkable form. . . . It is not so much philosophical as it is personal. It is the record not so much of studies pursued in books as of experiences wrought in my own spirit and in my own thinking."—Preface.

'Abbott, Rosa. Upside-down stories, 6 v. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1886. Il. S. cl., ea., 75 c.

'bbot, Willis J. Blue Jackets of '61': a history of the navy in the war of seccession; il. principally by W. C. Jackson. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1886. 7+318 p. O. canvas, $3.

The many eventful encounters of the navy, North and South, during the late war are graphically portrayed with pen and pencil. The book is a most attractive one for boys, who will gain both instruction and amusement from it. The style of pictures is most vigorous, while the manner of telling is fresh and comprehensive. Numerous anecdotes illustrate the story. The pictures are full-page and in the text. The cover is a novelty in canvas, representing a part of a white sail on a dark blue background: the ropes and lettering are in gold.

About, Edmond. Le buste. N. Y., W: R. Jenkins, [1886.] 145 p. S. (Contes choisis, no. 10.) pap., 25 c.

Abrams, Albert. A synopsis of morbid urine. San Francisco, Cal., W: S. Duncombe. 1886. 18+15½ card. 50 c.

Abrams, Albert. Stylographic note-book, designed for students' use: 300 pages of ruled paper, with tables, charts, weights, measures, abbreviations and rules for prescription writing, etc. San Francisco, Cal., W: S. Duncombe, 1886. Obl. Tt. bds., 50 c.

Accidents, and how to save life when they occur; with a complete treatise on poisons and their antidotes, describing the symptoms and treatment in each case; also a chapter on calisthenics and the care of health. N. Y. and Chic., Rand, McNally & Co., 1886. 3–143 p. il. T. pap., 25 c.

*Account book for the use of administrators and executors having business in the probate courts of Ohio [with] instructions and rules, cont. all the laws in force to May, 1886. [anon.] Dayton, Troup, Kinnard & Co., 1886. 1+26+21 p. D. cl. per dos., $3.

*Account book for the use of guardians and trustees having business in the probate courts of Ohio [with] laws relating to guardians and trustees. Rev. ed. to May, 1886. [anon.] Dayton, Troup, Kinnard & Co., 1886. 15+46 p. D. cl. per dos., $3.

Actor's ward (The); by the author of "A fatal flower." N. Y., G: Munro, [1886.] 315 p. S. (Seaside lib., pocket ed., no. 829.) pap., 20 c.

Adams, C: F., jr., and Adams, H: Chapters of Erie, and other essays. New issue. N. Y., H: Holt & Co. 429 p. S. cl., $1.75.

Published in 1871 by James R. Osgood & Co.

Adams, F. A. The Greek propositions, studied from their original meanings as designations of space. N. Y., Appleton, 1885. D. cl., 75 c.

Adams, G: Siouska, and other poems. Watertown, N. Y., published by the author, Times and Reformer Pub. House, 1886. 327+8 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The poem from which the book takes its title is based upon an Indian legend of the Black River; over two hundred and fifty other short poems on a variety of topics complete the volume.

Adams, H: C. A juridical glossary: an exhaustive compilation of the most celebrated maxims, aphorisms, doctrines, precepts, technical phrases and terms employed in the law, alphabetically arranged and carefully translated into English, with notes and citations. V. 1, A to E. Alb., Weed, Parsons & Co., 1886. 4+879, p. O. shp., $8.84

Adams, Rev. H. C. Charlie Lucken at school and college; il. by J. Finnemore. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1887 [1886.] 6+408 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Charlie Lucken is the great-uncle of the boy who hears the story of his life from a companion of his youth. The time this brave sailor flourished was 1797, when he was sent to Canada to reinforce General Wolfe. The history of the period and the many wars among the French and Canadians are graphically described.

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. January. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 23+136 p. S. cl., 75 c.

Midwinter and kindred themes form the contents of this number of "Through the year with the poets." Over a hundred poems from the best English writers represent the poetry of January. Several of the poems are now printed for the first time, while the majority of them are not contained in other anthologies, and will, therefore, be new to many readers. The index to authors, containing biographical data, has been prepared with much care.

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. February. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 26+133 p. S. cl., 75 c.

Collection of poems from various sources, having February for their subject. Several were written especially for this volume.

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. March. [Through the year with the poets.] Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 27+144 p. S. cl., 75 c.

The fourth volume of this popular little series devoted to March makes its appearance promptly. Mr. Adams has traversed the field of English literature to advantage, and the choice bits from the various poets which he here sets before the reader will be thoroughly appreciated. Four original poems are contributed by prominent authors—"By March winds led," by Louise Chandler Moulton; "March," by Mrs. Jane G. Austin; "A masque of March," by Clinton Scollard, and "The gift of spring," by Charles Miner Thompson.

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. April. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 28+148 p. S. (Through the year with the poets.) cl., 75 c.

The fifth volume of "Through the year with the poets." Contains about 150 poems from the best writers on "April." Index of authors. Index of subjects

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. May. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 27+154 p. S. (Through the year with the poets.) cl., 75 c.

The lines upon the title-page were written for that place by Mrs. Mary E. Blake; the following poems were also contributed to the volume: "May" by Willis Boyd Allen; "May" by Mrs. J. G. Austin; "May day," by Mrs. Meteyard; and "May" by William H. Havne.

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. June. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 28+144 p. S. (Through the year with the poets.) cl., 75 c.; white vellum, $1.

The seventh issue of this charming series is devoted to June. The volume opens with Lowell's exquisite description of the season in "Under the willows." Spenser and Herrick of the older poets, Wordsworth, Leigh Hunt, Landor, and others of a later period, Bryant, Stoddard, Matthew Arnold, William Morris, Sidney Dobell, and a multitude of living writers, old and young, English and American, pay tribute to the month in all the varied forms of which poetry is capable. A special edition of "June," very prettily bound in white vellum and pink cloth back, has been issued for wedding presents.

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. July. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., 1886. 27+148 p. S. (Through the year with the poets.) cl., $1.

The eighth volume of this series; contains four poems written especially for it by Mrs. Helen Gray Cone, Mrs. Alice W. Rollins, James W. Matthews, and one unknown writer. The rest of the book is made up of words about midsummer, chosen with judgment from all the best-known poets of England and America. The index to authors, giving dates of birth and death, adds to the value of these little collections.

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. August. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 27+148 p. S. (Through the year with the poets.) cl., 75 c.

Like its predecessors, the present volume contains, besides the selected matter, several original contributions. A little eight-line poem, "Now August comes," by Clinton Scollard, holds the place of honor on the introductory page. Harriet Prescott Spofford contributes an exquisite poem, "Mid-August midnight," and Miss Edith Thomas is represented, in addition to three selections from her pen, by a monody on "August." Other contributed poems are by Samuel Minturn Peck, Mrs. Jane G. Austen, William Morton Fullerton, and Robert Burns Wilson

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. September. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 28+158 p. S. (Through the year with the poets.) cl., 75 c.

One hundred and eight English and American writers, many celebrated, some almost unknown to fame, are represented by one hundred and forty-eight poems on the first Fall month. Mr. Oscar Fay Adams proves himself a most industrious and discriminating editor. The gem of this volume is Keat's perfect ode "To Autumn." The opening poem is by Robert Kelly Weeks, who died in 1876, generally esteemed the best of our younger poets. Most of the poems strike the tone of the "melancholy days have come."

Adams, Oscar Fay. October. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 26+154 p. S. (Through the year with the poets) cl., 75 c.

In the present volume of the "Through the year with poets" series, the editor has brought together the poets of the old and new world who have anything to say about the month of October. The majority of the poems are by American rather than English writers.

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. November. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 31+213 p. S. (Through the year with the poets.) cl., 75 c.

With the present volume this admirable series is brought to a close. Like the issues which have preceded it, a feature of the present volume consists of the contributed original poems. Mr. Samuel Longfellow is represented by a sonnet on "Indian summer," and Frank D. Sherman by a charming poem with the same title. The other poems are "Summer's visit to autumn," by William Morton Fullerton, and its antiphon, Andrew Bice Saxton's "Winter to autumn;" "A November grave," by James Benjamin Kenyon; "In November," by Bliss Carman; and Ernest Whitney's gracefully turned lines upon "The Midnight of the year."

Adams, Oscar Fay, ed. December. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1885.] 23+140 p. S. cl., 75 c.

Compilation of the principal poems in English and American literature referring with more or less directness of allusion to December and the early winter. Contains index of authors, with date of birth and death, Index of first lines, and Index of subjects.

Adams, Sebastian C. A chronological chart of ancient, modern, and biblical history; synchronized by S. C. Adams; with maps of the world's great empires drawn by Prof. J. A. Paine. 5th ed., rev. and enl. and brought down to 1883. N. Y., Colby & Co., 1886. 14 in. x 28 in. folded map, book form, pap. and cl., $10; on rollers, $15; in portfolio form, $15.

The chart or map is in chromo-lithograph, mounted on canvas, and is about 25 ft. long by 2¼ ft. wide. The length of the chart is divided by perpendicular lines into the fifty-nine centuries and their decades; across these century spaces pass from left to right colored lines or streams that represent the different historic nations (and lives of the patriarchs), and change their color to indicate every change of rulers; these streams divide, subdivide, unite, or disappear according to the record of the nation represented; thus every nation, with its consecutive rulers and all the leading facts of history, are placed upon a fixed scale and presented to the eye in their proper relations as to time, just as, geographically, a map locates towns, rivers, and countries. Meridians intersect places of the same longitude, in the same manner that century and decade lines on this chart mark contemporaneous nations, rulers and events. The origin of nation, their grand march through the centuries, and their final overthrow are prominent features of the chart, while the confused mass of dates and events that usually comprises our knowledge of history is so sifted and synchronized by it, so lighted with colors, models and illustrations, that the centuries of the past seem transformed into individual realities marked with their peculiar characteristics.

Contents: Woman as mother; Woman as wife; Woman as maiden; Woman in the world of letters; Woman in the world of art; Woman as the heroine, enthusiast, and social reformer

Adams, W: T., ["Oliver Optic," pseud.] All taut; or, rigging the boat. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1887 [1886.] 5-339 p. il. S. (The boat-builder ser., no. 5.) cl., $1.25.

Nearly all the characters presented and all that take prominent parts in the story have been introduced in the preceding volumes of the series. The principal of the Beech Hill Industrial School entertains some doubts in regard to the principle upon which he has been conducting the institution, and brings about a partial change in its character—by making it partly reformatory—still retaining its useful features. The subjects of the new experiment are the Topovers, the bad characters of the story, who become more tractable. The book is full of adventure and incident. The work to be done by the students is to fit a fore-and-aft schooner.

Adriance, J: S. Laboratory calculations and specific-gravity tables. N. Y., J: Wiley & Sons, 1886. 7+71 p. D. cl. interleaved, $1.00.

The aim in compiling this work has been to offer to the student as well as to the analytical chemist a substitute for much of his laborious calculations. Very much of this laborious but necessary work, the author feels, can be very easily dispensed with by the use of such help as he here offers, and he is assured that if it be received, it will be found to be indispensable in laboratory calculations. For this purpose he has selected only those tables which are in constant use in an ordinary laboratory. They have been prepared with the utmost care, and can be relied on in every particular. All the calculations are based on the atomic weights as lately determined by Prof. F. W. Clarke.

Æsop. A child's version of Æsop's fables, with a supplement containing fables from La Fontaine and Krilof; [arranged] by J. H. Stickney. Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 14+204 p. il. S. (Classics for children.) bds., 40 c.

Each fable is followed by suggestive questions, making the book a means of language culture and a partial manual of practical ethics

Agnew, Anna. From under the cloud; or, personal reminiscences of insanity. Cin., Rob. Clarke & Co., 1886. 2+196 p. por. S. cl., $1.75.

A sad and thrilling story of a lady's experience in the Indiana Hospital for the Insane. Mrs. Agnew was for seven years afflicted with periods of insanity, at which times her mania was a desire to kill herself. As her mind was perfectly clear a greater part of the time, she was enabled to observe and remember the treatment accorded her. This work, written since she was pronounced cured, goes into details of the brutal and heartless methods still existing in managing the insane.

"Refined fancy, graceful imagination, and true poetic feeling crop out on every page. The poet's muse always sings in sad strains, but without morbid or misanthropic sentiment. Many of these poems have an exquisite melody and lyrical flow, and suggest irresistibly a musical setting. Among these, 'The silver bridge,' 'If I were dead,' 'Lines to a Tuscan air," and 'A white rosebud' are particularly noticeable."—Boston Evening Gazette.

Alcott, Louisa M. Jo's boys, and how they turned out; a sequel to "Little men." Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 365 p. por. S. cl., $1.50.

For seven years Miss Alcott has worked at intervals upon this sequel to "Little Men." The story opens ten years after the close of that book. Dan, Nat, Emil, Demi, Stuffy, and Teddy all reappear. The scene is laid at Plumfield, where the boys all come to visit Mrs. Jo Bhaer. Mrs. March has died before the story opens, and Meg's husband also. Mrs. Meg, Mrs. Amy, and Mrs. Joe all live near together and the many scenes of fun and frolic described take place in one or the other of their homes. There is a great deal of love-making which will delight older girls and almost all the marriages turn out well. Miss Alcott says she has endeavored to suit everyone by many weddings, few deaths, and as much prosperity as the eternal fitness of things will permit. She also says the curtain has now fallen forever on the March family.

Alden, Mrs. Is. M., ["Pansy," pseud.] The Browning boys. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 5-109 p. 1 il. D. cl., 75 c.

The story of two boys who are suffering great poverty, through their father's illness and loss of work, and who desire to do something to help keep the family together. What they achieve both through their own earnest efforts and through the trust they learn to place in a higher power is well told. Each chapter aims to illustrate a Bible text.

There are stories by such authors as Margaret Sidney, Faye Huntington, and Mrs. Alden herself; short sketches and biographies, poems and a multitude of illustrations. The twelve numbers for the present year have been put into a beautiful cover, and make, altogether, a very handsome volume.

Alden, Mrs. Is. M., ["Pansy," pseud.] Spun from fact. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 5+338 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

The story is that of a young girl, Jeannie Bartlett, who through a long and painful illness became, as it was supposed, crippled for life. From time to time stories came to her of the miraculous cures effected by prayer, and a hope grows up in her that even her case may not be beyond help. A time is set for a season of united prayer in the sick room. The friends gather about her in the large arm-chair in which she has been placed. One eager, heartfelt prayer follows another, and at the close the invalid, full of faith, and endowed with a new and wonderful strength, rises to her feet, and walks with a firm step across the floor. It is no temporary cure; her strength remains, and from that time forth she is whole and well. The author claims that the main incident of the story, as narrated, is true.

Allen, Grant. For Maimie's sake: a tale of love and dynamite. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 232 p. D. pap., 25c.

"Maimie is a girl that captivates and is captivated everywhere; kisses and is kissed innocently whenever she makes a new friendship, and marries one man who adores her, while she adores another, though she also loves her husband! She commits many follies, among them that of shooting the man she has wedded; then she marries another who had a wretched married life with a woman who became a drunkard, and whom he supplied with brandy to hasten her death. After this the entanglements of the story get very thick, and the improbabilities grow stupendous. 'Love and dynamite' is the second title of this book, and there is a gang of Russian nihilists, women and men, with whom one of Maimie's husbands gets involved."—Phila. Evening Bulletin.

Surf Point is supposed to be a poor little fishing village on the coast of Maine. Rose Curwen, full of philanthropic ideas, settles there, opens a Sunday school, invites her pupils to visit her and learn to make presents to give away at Christmas time; while they sew, paste, draw, and work under her direction, she reads and tells them stories, which make up the bulk of the volume. They all are meant to teach Christmas lessons.

Alton, Edmund. Among the law-makers. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 12+308 p. il. D. cl., $2.50.

When quite a small boy Mr. Alton was for four years a page in the U. S. Senate. It is from this experience he has obtained a large part of the material embraced in this volume. It consists of anecdotes about public men and descriptions of the pranks of himself and his page associates. This side of the book, however, is secondary to the instructive element which pervades it. The writer digresses, continually going out of his course "to introduce peculiar specimens of legislative action, and to illustrate characteristics of the respective Houses; and he has, at times, sought to do more—to exhibit, by practical examples, the constitutional relations between the three departments of the General Government, as distinct, yet interdependent, parts of a mighty and harmonious system; to emphasize commanding principles of civil liberty and public law; and, in general, to stimulate in the minds of American youth an active and patriotic interest in the political history and destiny of their country." A greater part of the volume appeared originally as a serial in St. Nicholas. Modifications and additions will be found in the present form.

Anders, J. M., M.D. House-plants as sanitary agents; or, the relation of growing vegetation to health and disease; comprising also a consideration of the subject of practical floriculture, and of the sanitary influences of forests and plantations. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1887 [1886.] 4–334 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Dr. Anders wishes it understood from the outset that his work does not claim to be either a treatise upon hygiene or botany; he aims simply to set forth, in plain terms, the latest light regarding the effects of some of the various physiological functions in plants and flowers upon the atmosphere in general, and the air of dwellings in particular, as well as the application of this knowledge to the laws of health. Most of the conclusions put forward have been arrived at from the results of an almost continuous series of personal experiments extending over a period of eight years. The chief purpose of the writer will have been accomplished if he succeeds in proving that plants and flowers, particularly when cultivated in-doors, are worthy to be placed in the foremost rank of sanitary agencies. The concluding chapters treat of the sanitary influences of forest-growth—a subject engrossing, and deservedly so, a large share of the attention of scientific observers.

This book is addressed to believers in the divinity of Jesus Christ, and therefore is not critical after the modern fashion. "It discusses no textual questions, and enters into no special historical or archæological investigations; and it assumes the substantial truth of the Scriptures as we possess them. It deals only with the outlines of the Divine purpose, not with the details. Its scope is simple—to set forth the manner in which God is pleased to reveal Himself to men, past, present, and future, as He has made it known." Author of "The life of our Lord upon earth"

Archer, T: By fire and sword: a story of the Huguenots. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 5–256 p. D. cl., $1.
Gives a vivid picture of the persecution of the Huguenots. The scene is laid in the city of Nimes, in the year 1744. The chief sufferers are the silk manufacturers and their friends. The narrative element is subordinate to the historical. By author of "Decisive events in history."

Archie's chances; [also] A child's victory; by the author of "The Spanish brothers." N. Y., T: Nelson & Sons, 1886. 4–141 p. il. D. cl., 60 c.
The story of Archie Lyndon, who is early left an orphan, dependent upon his uncle's kindness. His uncle is in "trade," and Archie, whose father belonged to a good family, revolts at the prospect of earning a living behind the counter. A brother of his father comes on the scene, a man who has amassed an immense fortune in the Fiji Islands. He gives Archie the chance of becoming heir to his wealth and business, which the young man refuses after deliberation, as he finds out his uncle is an infidel. He then crushes his pride, goes into the shop, does his duty thoroughly, and finally becomes a missionary, in which capacity he stands beside his uncle's death-bed, some twenty years afterward.

"Lady Valworth's diamonds" are stolen under peculiar circumstances. A young girl is found wearing them at a party; she reports having received them from a lover. Investigation proves the lover to be Lady Valworth's son under an assumed name. There are two heroines, to both of whom this young nobleman is engaged. The "agony" is rather "piled on," but all ends well for the young ladies, the lover ending his life in despair. "The haunted chamber," the second story, has already appeared in other editions in this country.

Argles, Mrs. Marg. ["The Duchess," pseud.] A mental struggle: a novel. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 3–292 p. D. cl., 75 c.

Imogen Heriot, a proud, beautiful young girl, with a deep worship for birth and station, is the one who goes through the "mental struggle." She rudely rejects a man she loves because his father's money was made in trade, and accepts one she does not love for his title and social position. The ordeal she passes through is brightly told, with the aid of many little side issues in the way of flirtations and love affairs, and a good deal of clever, amusing talk.

Armitt, Annie. In shallow waters: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 217 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 64.) pap., 25 c.

To delineate a hero of an unusual type this story seems to have been written. Henry Dilworth belongs to English middle class life, is somewhat rough in exterior, and has few of the lighter graces of a gentleman; but at heart he is a hero, and a man of exquisite refinement and rare unselfishness. Agnes Leake meets him on the steamer going out to Australia, to which country she is accompanying her newly married sister and brother-in-law. There is a storm, the vessel runs on a rock, the newly married pair are drowned, and Agnes is rescued by Dilworth. A brief residence on a desert island ensues; the couple are then found and get back to England, Dilworth in the mean time marrying Agnes. The rest of the story deals with the chief characteristics of the married pair, Agnes' selfishness, which is hid under a most charming exterior, finally wrecking Dilworth's life.

"Mr. Armour's work is somewhat in the line of Drummond's 'Natural law in the spiritual world,' but with more sharpness in his definitions and a closer adherence to Scripture in his argument. He does not, indeed, discuss so wide, and we must add so vague, a theme as 'the spiritual world,' but confines attention to redemption by atonement, which he holds to be, in all its details, consonant with every idea of law."—*Phila. The matters treated of are, Nature and revelation; primeval man; evolution; the Mosaic cosmogony; the Pentateuch; providence and prayer. The author has aimed to popularize his subject, by the avoidence of all technical terms, and by condensing the discussion into as small a space as possible. He is pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Norfolk, Va., and was formerly professor of chemistry and geology in the Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va.

Jean, a little French child, is the hero of this book. All the little episodes of his day—his rising, bath, breakfast, play, etc., are illustrated in full-page colored pictures, each enclosing a small portion of text. The pictures are very delicately colored, and quite artistic in drawing and composition.

Arnold, Edwin. India revisited. Author's ed. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 5+324 p. il. D. cl., $2.

A series of articles descriptive of India, which were published recently anonymously in the London Daily Telegraph. When the author's name was made known, it was acknowledged that no one but Mr. Arnold could have written them. The London Bookseller, in reviewing the work, says: "We indeed have India in our midst. Their castes and customs, their pride and prejudices, can be transported to us only in the shape and manner in which Mr. Arnold has undertaken to accomplish. And to those who entertain no hope of ever seeing the land of the Hindu and Mahomedan, we would suggest that they read this volume." Throughout the volume are interspersed several pleasant poems and metrical translations of Mr. Arnold's, hitherto unpublished, and they help effectively to illustrate some of the topics which he discusses.

N. Y., Ward, Lock & Co., 1886. 2-444 p. il. D. parchment, $2.50.

This work was first published in France in 1865; although there have been in English many works based upon it, or giving large extracts from it, this is the first complete translation. The observations which the author embodies here were all made by himself upon people he came in contact with during a period of twenty years. Mr. Heron-Allen furnishes, besides other matter, a bibliography of the subject. Rosamund Brunel Housley contributes a number of original plates and explanatory diagrams.

As common mortals: a novel. N. Y., Cassell & Co., 1886. 404 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The scene is laid in Goverick, under which name Philadelphia is easily recognized. Milly Barron, the heroine, is a descendant of generations of Harrises, who have always conformed to conventionalities and led quiet, correct lives as pillars of the Presbyterian Church. Milly at the age of ten displays marked originality; at sixteen she meets Miss Reese, a "woman's rights" advocate, devoted to spiritualism, abolition of slavery, higher education, and a conglomeration of the many theories of various sects and beliefs. Her influence on Milly is marked. After going through many trials and fighting hard for her new ideas, Milly finally loves a good man and becomes "as common mortals."

Ayres, Alfred, [pseud. for T: E. Osmun.] The essentials of elocution. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 89 p. S. cl., 60 c.

A short treatise on the art of reading, refuting almost all the hitherto published methods. The author says that there can be no good acting without good elocution; that without much study, and in the right direction, there can be no good elocution; and that there is no art which can be taught with more success than elocution. The ideals specially held up to students are Charlotte Cushman and Edwin Forrest. The exterior of the little book is very dainty; the title is a fac-simile of Alfred Ayres's penmanship in gilt letters. One half the book consists of extracts for reading, chosen with good taste.

In his "Letter dedicatory and introductory" Mr. Bacon says: "It is my constant purpose to go back of systems, confessions, traditions, customary phrases, to 'the simplicity that is in Christ.' It is away from simplicity that corruption commonly tends and toward it that good reformation returns." This gives the key-note of the book, toward which the arguments, however widely they may diverge through different fields of religious thought, tend to return.

Badeau, Adam. Aristocracy in England. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 306 p. S. cl., $1.25.

A series of articles originally published in the N. Y. Sunday Sun, on the English aristocracy. They discuss the queen, rank and title, primogeniture, the Prince of Wales, Americans at court, the personal character of the queen, the House of Lords, the Princess of Wales, manners, caste, illegitimacy, servants in the country, servants in town, church and state, etc., etc.

Baird, H: M. The Huguenots and Henry of Navarre. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 2 v. 23+458; 18+525 p. maps O. cl., $5.

An account of the persistent struggle of the Huguenots of France to secure a fair degree of religious liberty, such as they finally attained in the Edict of Nantes; fifteen years of the struggle (1574-1589) falling in the reign of their deadly enemy, Henry III., and nine more (1589-1598) in the reign of the friendly Henry of Navarre, now known in history as Henry IV. of France. The work, while distinct in itself, is supplementary to the author's previous work, the "History of the Rise of the Huguenots in France." He hopes in time to bring the series to its natural conclusion in a "History of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes."

Baker, Ella M. Clover-leaves: a collection of poems; comp. and arranged by K. G. B. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1885.] 20+235 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A brief memoir tells the story of the short life of the young poet, and the fact that she was born in Connecticut. She is the author of "Christmas Pie," a collection of Christmas stories, and an engaging child's story, "Soldier and servant." The majority of her poems have a religious tendency, breathing a quiet trust and faith that is most consoling. Many are in remembrance of friends; others sing of nature, and others are designed for young readers.

Baker, Ella M. Put in his thumb and pulled out a plum: stories for a Christmas pie. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 322 p. il. D. cl., $1.25.

A little girl poor in pocket but rich in a fine, generous nature is enabled one Christmas eve to do a service to a rich family; she injures herself in attempting to rescue a painting from a burning room, and she is nursed and petted by them back to health. She is bright and clever, suggesting many Christmas games, out of which grow a serie of Christmas stories. They are six or seven in numbe and adapted to very young children.

Portrays a New England farmhouse with a group of children whose Christian names have become obscured in the nicknames, "Dear," Roundtop, Squaretop, Pet and Tiptop. "Dear" fulfils the promise of her name and will interest the little reader by quaint sayings and doings, and a loving ministry over her brothers and sisters. The story has a humorous side and the incident about the family pill, Dear's Timon, and her missionary effort, is sufficient to provoke mirth, as well as deeper feeling, in an older reader.

The arrangement of the different chapters and subdivisions presents the history of English and American literature after a new method. The works of a similar character are grouped and studied together and compared with each other. The student's attention is directed first and principally to books rather than to authors. The study of its subjects may be begun with any chapter and followed in any order that the judgment of the teacher may suggest.

Bales, C. R. The diacritical speller: a practical course of exercises in spelling and pronunciation; embracing alphabetic analysis; a simple and comprehensive study of sound principles and diacritical marking, and a short notice of penmanship. Syracuse, N. Y., C. W. Bardeen, 1885. 68 p. il. O. bds., 50 c.

Balestier, Wolcott. A victorious defeat: a romance. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 349 p. il. S. cl., $1.

A most interesting study of Moravianism. The story is located in the village of Judea, a Moravian settlement of Pennsylvania, and begins some fifty or more years back. The heroine is a charming creation, and though her father is a Moravian, her heart is not in the religion. The Moravian method of chosing a wife by "lot" is the heart of the plot. The ordeal that Constance Van Cleef goes through is quite dramatic and pictured with remarkable power. It is the Moravian minister, Mr. Keator, who is the hero of the "victorious defeat." After obtaining all his heart desires, his better nature conquers, and he yields up his claim to Constance, who has been awarded his by "lot."

Ballard, Harlan H. Model composition cards, 5 packets. N. Y., The Writers' Pub. Co., 1886. Ea., 24 c., or for series, $1.20.

A series of graded cards to aid children in writing compositions. Each card has a picture of the subject upon it, with leading questions directing attention to special points and suggestions for finding information.

Ballou, Maturin M. Genius in sunshine and shadow. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 5+309 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author of "Edge-tools of speech" embodies in a succession of charmingly written chapters, a peculiarly interesting collection of anecdotes concerning the inner lives of the world's heroes and notables. In the first chapter facts concerning the obscure origin of many famous men are given; the second is devoted to details of characteristic traits; the third shows the various methods of composition familiar with great writers. The other chapters cover kindred topics and are rich in fresh illustrations and facts of a literary character. Index.

Balzac, Honoré de. César Birotteau. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 3+401 p. D. hf. mor., $1.50.

Howells might have based his study of "Silas Lapham" upon "César Birotteau." Like the famous American, César is a man of the people, who comes when a lad to Paris, with no worldly wealth but the clothes he stands in. He finds work with the Ragons, who had been perfumers to Marie Antoinette, and finally through his honesty and industry becomes master of the shop. He is for a time an ardent Royalist, and receives the cross of the Legion of Honor. He then becomes ambitious, and neglecting his pastes and balsams, enters into speculations, and rushes wildly into society. His bankruptcy is the next step, and here the great side of an apparently commonplace character is illustrated with all the powerful realism of which Balzac is master. Poor César is honest to the core; he gives up everything to his creditors, and sacrifices his life in trying to pay his remaining debts. This is, equally with "Père Goriot," counted as one of Balzac's masterpieces. It describes with marvellous fidelity the life, thoughts, and actions of the Paris shop-keeper.

Balzac. Honoré de. Cousin Pons. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 5+426 p. D. hf. mor., $1.50.

"The power by which Balzac is distinguished from all other novelists is displayed remarkably in 'Cousin Pons.' The plan of the story is of the simplest. It has but two motives—friendship and greed. The characters are few, the situations commonplace. But the interest of the story never flags. The development of the little drama proceeds with steady pace. As the people concerned go about their several functions their reality grows upon us, and the fortunes of the two musicians absorb us until the climax of the sordid tragedy is reached. The friendship of Pons and Schmucke is one of the purest and most beautiful creations in fiction. These two old men, drawn together by a community of occupations and tastes, come to have but one life between them. Each is the complement of the other. Each is necessary to the other. Of the two, Schmucke is the higher soul. Pons is capable of baseness."—New York Tribune.

Balzac, Honoré de. Eugénie Grandet. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 4+294 p. D. hf mor., $1.50.

"Eugénie Grandet has always, and justly, been regarded as one of Balzac's masterpieces. It is high tragedy in humble life. Perhaps nowhere in the 'Comedie Humaine' is the author's profound knowledge of human nature so fully displayed. There is, in truth, no miser in fiction to be compared to Grandet, and none whose portrait has been so elaborately finished, with such myriad fine lines and touches, with such laberious detail, with such marvellous verisimilitude. Eugénie Grandet is reared under the roof of this man. She and her mother are his slaves. The fascination of 'Eugénie Grandet,' as of all Balzac's books, is the thorough naturalness of the whole. The reader is made to feel, not that he is perusing a fiction, but a biography; that all this actually happened. The translation is careful and, as a rule, accurate. The choice of English corresponds well and faithfully to Balzac's nervous, compact, electric style. The power of the original is clearly shown. In fact, the publishers could not have found a more capable and in all respects trustworthy interpreter of the great French master."—N. Y. Tribune.

An earnest protest against the legal-tender decision of the Supreme Court, March 3, 1884, which Mr. Bancroft considers will be, if carried into effect, a "death-blow to the constitution."

Bancroft, Hubert Howe. History of the Pacific States of North America. V. 16. California, v. 4, 1840–1845. San Francisco, A. L. Bancroft & Co., 1886. 12+786 p. O. cl., $4.50.

In this volume we come to the most romantic epoch of California's history prior to the great gold discovery. Continuing the history of California from 1836, the doings of foreigners, American occupation, the Graham affair, the coming of Sutter and the establishment of New Helvetia are all fascinating subjects treated in a new light. Not less important is the record of the successive overland immigrant parties, beginning with the Bartleson, or Bidwell party in 1841, and including the companies of Workman and Rowland in the same year; of Hastings, Chiles, and Walker in 1843; of Fremont, Kelsey, and Stevens or Murphy in 1844; and of McMahon and Clyman, Swasey and Todd, Sublette, Grigsby, and Ide, Fremont and Walker, and Hastings and Semple in 1845. Com. Jones' achievements in 1842 are given, and an account of the Russians who left California in 1841. The Hudson's Bay Co. branch at San Francisco, from 1841, is fully noted, with a record of the fur-hunters' operations in the interior, and of the trading caravans from New Mexico. The political record is of deep interest. General Vallejo's controversy with Governor Alvarado; the downfall of the latter; the accession of Micheltorena with his army of Cholo ruffians; the revolution by which he was overthrown, with the part, more dramatic than bloody, taken by foreigners in that movement; and finally, the beginnings of Pio Pico's rule, all furnish material for several chapters of interesting complications. Two chapters are devoted to local annals of the north and south in 1841-45; and finally, we have an alphabetical continuation of the Pioneer Register and Index from J to Q, with a veritable mine of biographic detail.

The first volume yet issued of this valuable historical series, which is complete in itself, with preface and index, taking up events from the earliest records and bringing them down to the present day. The publishers are assured that this is a timely volume. There is no part of the United States domain whose climate, resources, and history are so little known as those of Alaska. There is no part more needful of the attention of statesmen and men of progress and philanthropy. It is to be believed that this volume will prove of immediate and lasting benefit in thus throwing new light on this distant region.

Baring-Gould, S. Court Royal: a story of cross currents. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 3–417 p. S. cl., 75 c.

A wretched, starving woman strives to drown herself and child in Sutton Pool, from off the quay of ancient Plymouth. They are both rescued, fed, and clothed, and the mother offered a situation if she can give up her child. Joanna, aged twelve, is pawned to Lazarus, an old pawnbroker, for seven years, for half a sovereign. Joanna's life, which occupies the rest of the book, is full of novelty. She is a handsome, shrewd girl, and gradually advances from being the old man's "slavey" to the position of heiress to all his wealth. Life in the old pawn-shop is graphically described, and the tragedy of old Lazarus' story, and the romance of Joanna's, strongly presented. "Court Royal" is the home of an aristocratic family, and is heavily mortgaged to the Jew. To revenge a wrong the owner once did him, he uses every effort to gain possession of it.

Baring-Gould, S. Little Tu'penny: a tale. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 159 p. D. pap., 25 c.

Little Tripolema Yellowleaf Redfern grows up within twenty miles of London. She is nicknamed "little Tu'penny," and petted and spoiled by her mother, who had formerly been lady's maid at the great place of the town. She is an original child, full of weird fancies, but thoroughly spoiled. She is married to a housebreaker, who palms himself off as a lord. After many troubles she returns to her native village and is taken care of by the town miller, who has loved her from her infancy.

"The absorbing story begins with pictures of the surgings of the nations—the Huns, the Sclavs, the Goths, the Saxons, the Franks; it tells of the throes by which the heroes of old brought the great people to its independent life; recounts the struggles of the various Teutonic families among themselves, and of all of them with their neighbors, and brings up vividly the power of an idea, as it shows the strife and perplexities arising from the Imperial sceptre, as well as the dire contest that followed the schism of the church and in a short time involved all Christendom in disputes touching the highest interests of humanity. The reader of the story of Germany is thus brought face to face with problems of the deepest moment."—Ib. face.

Barr, Amelia E. Between two loves: a tale of the West Riding. N. Y., Harper, [1886.] 176 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 102.) pap., 25 c.
A quaint romance, which is for the most part enacted amidst the din and clatter of a Yorkshire mill. There is very little plot to reveal, and the story depends for its interest on the wooing of Master Burley and the decision of pretty Sarah Benson, who is loath to desert her loom and choose an easier life at the expense of duty.

Miss Barr has chosen the heroine for her last novel from among the fisher folk of Pittenloch, a little hamlet near the "East Neuk o'Fife;" Maggie Promoter wins at once the sympathy and admiration of the reader, who follows her from the beaching of her father's boat to her cottage, where she is discussing the future of herself and brother when the arrival of Allan Campbell proves the turning point in both their fortunes, for Allan recognizes the talents of Davie, and aids him to a scholarship at Glasgow, and then comes the wooing of Maggie by Campbell of Drumlach.

Barr, Mrs. Amelia E. The last of the Macallisters: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 173 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 58.) pap., 25 c.
"A spirited and pathetic sketch of manners, character, and scenery in the Scottish Highlands. The scene is laid in the wilds of Caithness and Sutherland, and the time is the earlier half of the last century.... The story of the Young Pretender is introduced apparently to illustrate the passionate attachment of the Highlander to the house of Stuart, and a sadder or more dramatic chapter was never written than that which describes the slaughter of the Macalliators at Culloden, and the burial of their last laird. We can heartily commend the book for its vivid local coloring, its historical interest, and its simplicity and purity of diction."—New York Sun.

Consists of fifty-four finely engraved and colored maps bound in stiff covers, in vest-pocket form, for handy reference. Physical geography is represented by several charts of rare worth to any one having occasion to consult them—showing ocean currents and soil, temperature, time, etc., of the world. The maps which represent the political geography of the world have, in addition to the common maps, others giving the environs of the capitals of Great Britain, the physical geography and railways of the same, with several new ones drawn especially because of present or immediate political interest. All the political maps have the most approved features. The whole is introduced by valuable statistical summaries of the leading facts of general geography.

Bartlett, J. Gordon. Edith Dayton: a novel. N. Y., Brentano Bros., [1886.] 3-226 p. D. pap., 50 c.
The scene alternates from Winmere to London, England. At the former place we first meet the heroine, Edith Dayton, after a quarrel with her betrothed; this is followed by a reconciliation; then Edith puts into execution her threat to visit London, where she meets Laurence Neale. Some strange complications ensue, and the reader becomes interested in the several love affairs of Laura Vale, Lady Mona, and Saifie Ahedon before Edith's romance shapes itself satisfactorily. The peccadilloes of some of the characters do not lessen the interest in the story, and they certainly add truth to the picture of English society-life.

Baxley, I: R. The Temple of Alanthur, with other poems. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 8+136 p. D. cl., $1.25.
"The tale which names the volume is a pure invention, with Egypt and its mythology for picturesque setting. Alanthur is an architect and sculptor, building a temple to Thoth, and betrothed to Ranethis, of whom Naredin, son of Thoth and a mortal woman, is enamored. Ranethis resists the passion of Naredin, who in his rage destroys part of the temple of Alanthur and is judged by Osiris, his doom being banishment to the vapors of unformed worlds until the last judgment, unless he shall redeem himself by penitence. This story is wrought out with unmistakable poetic strength.... The rest of the poems in this book are nearly all unusual in tone, and some of striking character. "Baldric and Lissoy" tells a tale of knighthood and enchantment in verse of singular masculine force and with a profusion of lurid imagery. "The gold-dream" is a remarkable allegory of the passion of avarice, and is matched by as powerful an allegory of death, "The journey of Lord Eglamore."—Springfield Republican.

A record of adventures which led to the discovery of the relics of the long-missing expedition commanded by the Comte de la Perouse, which left France just about a hundred years ago on a voyage to the South Seas, from which no one ever returned.

Bayma, Jos. Elements of geometry for the use of beginners. San Francisco, A. Waldteufel, 1885. 137 p., il. D. cl., $1.25.
Written for the younger students of Santa Clara College, California, in which the author is professor of mathematics. He claims that while the book contains nothing new, it is not a mere compilation. Its concise arrangement and simplicity of method are its chief points. It embraces all the theorems that have, in the author's opinion, real importance, and its whole contents may be learned within six or seven months in the first year of the mathematical curriculum.

Bayma, J. Treatise on plane and spherical trigonometry, with logarithmic tables. San Francisco, A. Waldteufel, 1886. 89+72 p. D. cl., $1.75.
"This treatise on trigonometry contains nothing substantially new," says Prof. Bayma. "My object has been to furnish our boys with a clear, though concise, explanation of the principles, rules, and formulas upon which the solution of plane and of spherical triangles depends. I have given a moderate number of problems and exercises."

An argument aiming to show the necessity of placing men and women on the same footing of equality, socially and politically. The author is a socialist and an atheist, and would extend to woman the same license to ignore moral laws that he claims for man. He reviews woman's position in her relations to man from the beginning of time to the present day, and draws, what he considers, an enticing picture of her future, when freed from the social and moral restraints which he believes now impede her progress, that no intelligent and conscientious woman can desire to see realised.

The material comprised in this volume was first used in a series of lectures delivered before the students of the Hartford Theological Seminary. Some of the questions with which socialism deals, such as the rights of labor, the responsibilities and restrictions of wealth, the sources and cure of pauperism, the origin of crime and its proper treatment, and the true doctrine of family life, are critically discussed from the standpoint of a Christian minister, modern socialism being found to be "the enemy of religion and of the family, and so the enemy of man." Opens with a brief historical and descriptive sketch of socialistic phases and methods. The writer is pastor of Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Belt, Harriett Pennawell. A mirage of promise. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1887 [1886.] 3–354 p. D. cl., $1.25.
The time of this narrative is sixty years ago, the locality is "Fordyce Co., in one of our Middle States." The hostile feelings existing between Federalists and Democrats, and the efforts of the earlier Abolitionists, are introduced as historical elements. The "mirage" is supposed to be the distant, fascinating glimpse of the "promise" of abolition. The thread of the story is slight, but almost impossible to condense. Some of the leading characters, especially the women, are very well drawn.

Benjamin, Park. The age of electricity, from amber-soul to telephone. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 9+381 p. il. D. cl., $2.

A popular and comprehensive account of the advancement of electrical science from the earliest to the latest times. Mr. Benjamin says his work "is not a technical treatise, nor is it addressed in any wise to the professional electrician. It is simply an effort to present the leading principles of electrical science, their more important applications, and of these last the stories, in a plain and, it is hoped, a readable way." There are no formulas in the book; only such technical terms as have now made their way into every-day use are employed; and the more strictly scientific branches of the subject, such as measurement, testing, etc., are omitted altogether. The chapters at the close, giving descriptions of the more recent inventions and achievements, are of special interest and importance.

Benjamin, S G. W. Persia and the Persians. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 14+507 p. por. and il. Q. cl., $5; hf. cf., $9.

In the winter of 1882–1883 the author was appointed by President Arthur to the legation in Persia, just created by act of Congress. The experiences connected with the establishment and conduct of the legation at Teherân suggested the present volume. His position of course gave him exceptional opportunities for seeing the country, and penetrating into the domestic life of the people. He had many novel and entertaining adventures of his own, which he combines with graphic descriptions, and political and other observations of great value. He does ample justice too, to the rich stores of Persian poetry and legends, its strange customs, and its romantic scenery and architecture. The volume is an unusually handsome one; printed in large type with ample spacings on fine rich paper with generous margins. The illustrations are many and very good. The dark blue cloth binding is richly stamped in red and gold.

Mr. Bensel is a New York man, and author of "King Cophetua's wife," and many graceful verses. "In the king's garden" is the first of the forty-one poems that make up the volume. They are dedicated to his sister Emily. The tone of many is deeply religious. The little volume is prettily gotten up.

Bent, S. Arthur. Hints on language in connection with sight-reading and writing in primary and intermediate schools. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1886. 75 p. T. cl., 50 c.

In order to suggest a method of graded class-work, which shall include under the head of language whatever is taught in reading, writing, form, color, and number, the author offers these hints to the profession, on the bases of experiments already attempted by teachers, to whose assistance he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted. Gives a list of books of authority on topics suitable for language exercises, and a list of books to form a teachers' consulting library.

Beroy, Paul. La langue Française: méthode pratique pour l'étude de cette langue. N. Y., W: R. Jenkins, 1886. 2+296 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A new work for learning French by the natural method. The author, a graduate from one of the French universities, and for several years a successful teacher, has embodied in this comprehensive treatise a system of his own, which, while based upon the principles of Heness and Sauveur, leads the student gradually forward (explaining as he goes), from the simplest forms of the language into and through its more difficult constructions and grammar. The work, with its profuse explanations and annotations, which are found on each page, will be of great assistance to the teacher using it as well as to the student, obviating the necessity, as it does, of constantly answering difficult questions.

This delightful little work had an immense sale in the original French. It has lost none of its charm in its excellent translation. It is divided into seven parts: Animals; Plants; Stones and rocks; Physics; Chemistry; Animal physiology; Vegetable physiology. All that can be learned regarding these subjects is given in a succinct, attractive style. The American editor has made only such changes and additions as were necessary to Americanize the book and adapt it to the requirements of public and private schools as well as to the home instruction in this country. Natural history has been slightly enlarged by the introduction of several American species, and a few inaccuracies concerning other species met with in the U. S have been corrected.

Besant, Walter. Children of Gibeon: a novel. N. Y., Harper, [1886.] 87 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no, 551.) pap., 20 c.

A modern English story in which some of the characters resemble the "Gibeonites" of Biblical fame, hence the title. The adoption of a child results in a case of mixed identity, and is the principal incident in a number of sensational ones which make up the plot. The scene alternates from Hackney Marsh to London and Hoxton. The characters represent three grades of society: the aristocracy of London, the respectable working class of Hackney Marsh, and the poor of Hoxton slums.

The author of this work ranks as the best living authority on the subject of the Aztecs. He is a distinguished French scientist, who spent twenty-five years in Mexico, and to his own studies has added the testimony of all available authorities—those who saw Mexico in its splendor, as well as the more modern writers who have treated that interesting and romantic region. The book thus presents the results of all investigations to the present day. Although of great value to scholars who have specially studied the subject, the work is more especially intended for the general reader, imperfectly acquainted with the history and character of the Aztecs. To this end it is written in an easy and attractive style.

Bietigheim. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 172 p. D. pap., 50 c

The unknown author, looking with a prophetic eye into the distant future, depicts the probable fate of the United States and Europe. "Bietigheim" is a great battle which takes place in Germany during the war of 1890-'91. This war is brought about by a number of little disputes between this country and Germany concerning the rights of our naturalized citizens. The campaign, in which the European states, with the exception of Russia and Austria, are our allies, is fought in Europe—the Americans being the victors. The result is a spread of Republicanism throughout Europe, and an almost total ruin of imperialism at the beginning of the 20th century. The moral influence of our own country in this condition of things remedies many of the evils now existing between labor and capital springing from monopolies, the tariff, etc.

A work giving evidence of long researches and investigations. It is concise and to the point in every instance, and possesses, the author hopes, "the merit of authenticity and reliability." The author makes clear, and establishes beyond controversy, it appears to us, many facts heretofore vague and obscure in the early history of St. Louis. He presents the facts in all cases as he found them derived from the original official Spanish and French documents, most of them translated by himself, some of them yet in the archives, and others placed into his hands by descendants of the original participants therein. Some of the most interesting portions of the volume are those relating to the treaty of the purchase of Louisiana by the United States from France, in 1803, and the transfer An appendix gives brief notices of some of the most prominent of the early families of St. Louis, particularly of those whose names have been continued through male descendants to the present time. The publishers deserve special mention for the sumptuous book they have made of this work. The mechanical part reflects as creditably upon them as does the literary part upon the author. The edition is limited to 100 copies.

Bingham, Jennie M. Annals of the Round Table, and other stories N Y., Phillips & Hunt 1886. 3 279 p. D. cl., $1.

The "Annals of the Round Table" occupies the larger part of the volume. It is the history of a club of young girls, who organized for mutual help and improvement. They have Longfellow and Whittier evenings, in which recitations are given, and brief essays read on the life and writings of the poets Other evenings are devoted to Bible characters, a day in London, etc. Suggestive and helpful to young girls desiring to form a similar club. Nine short stories complete the volume.

Bishop, Putnam P. The psychologist. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons 1886. 3+354 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Mr. Bishop of the large hardware firm of Millecramp & Co., N. Y City, is ordered to rest by his employers and goes to a quiet place on the shores of Lake Champlain. Here he meets Jorman the "psychologist," who becomes a factor for good in his life, influencing him to give up his insane desire for wealth and speculation, and to devote himself to the cultivation of the higher capacities of his nature. The volume is composed chiefly of conversations between these men, embracing all subjects, and treating love, marriage, fraud, religion, politics, business, and many other topics wholly from a psychological standpoint. The author shows an analytical mind and keeps the individuality of his characters clearly defined. A pretty love-story is a subordinate element of the book.

Blake, Ja. Vila. Essays. Chic., C: H. Kerr & Co., 1887 [1886.] 3–216 p. D. cl., $1.25.

"The essays of Mr. Blake," says the Chicago Tribune, "will surprise and delight all lovers of good English prose. He has made a contribution of lasting value to our literature in a form so condensed and so original as to inevitably attract and hold the attention of thoughtful readers. One is reminded not only by the brevity of these essays, but by the cast and mould of the sentences and the plain, fine discriminating language of Bacon's condensed wit and sense. The quaint, clear English, like that which has come down to us from other days, is, however, the only thing in the book that is not modern. This writer reflects the culture of to-day."

Blake, Mrs. M. E Youth in twelve centuries, poems by M E B. drawings by F Childe Hassam. Bost., D Lothrop & Co, 1886. 78 p. O. cl., $2.

Blake, Mortimer, D.D Bible children; ed. by Mrs. Evelyn L. Morse. Bost., Congregational S. S. and Pub. Soc., [1886.] 240 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Thirteen sermons for children. Dr. Blake had a rare gift for speaking to little children, as may be judged from the graphic style of these pleasant addresses. The editor of the little volume is his daughter

Blake, Mortimer, D.D. Soundings, by Rev. Mortimer Blake, ed by his daughter, Mrs. Evelyn Morse; with prefatory note by Rev. Jacob Ide. Bost., Congregational S. S. & Pub. Soc., [1886.] 226 p. por. D. cl., $1.25.

Fifteen sermons, prefaced by a biographical sketch of Dr. Blake, who died in 1884, while in charge of a most important parish at Taunton, Mass. The sermons are practical and show ripe scholarship and original turns of thought and expression. The writer of the preface says "he skilfully avoided the seaweed and barnacles of profitless speculation, and dropped his lead where it was sure to fasten itself upon a priceless pearl." For this reason the title "Soundings" has been given to the book.

Blake, S. Leroy, D.D. The book; or, when, and by whom, the Bible was written; with an introduction by M. B. Riddle. Bost., Congregational S. S. and Pub. Soc., [1886.] 4–283 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Instead of beginning as far back as possible, and coming down, as so many have done, Dr. Blake begins at a time when the Canon was settled, and then finds his way back, showing that its books were long in existence before that date. Thus he traces the books of the New Testament back through the Apostolic Fathers to the Apostles themselves. Dr. J. W. Wellman says of it: "It answers questions often put to ministers respecting the origin of the Bible." Dr. Alexander McKenzie writes of it: "It will be of great value to the young and those who have not given careful attention to the character and history of the Bible."

Blessed Easter-tide (The), comp. by the editor of "Christmas-tide in song and story." N. Y., A. D. F. Randolph & Co, [1886.] 160 O. cl., $2.50.

Compiled by editor of "Christmas tide in song and story" with excellent taste. The title is in gilt, the subtitle in purple lettering. The Bible history of the last supper, Good Friday, Easter Even, and Easter is given in full. The initial letters of the chapters preceding the account of Easter are purple, then change to gilt in telling of the Resurrection. There are many well-known poems added to illustrate the idea and meaning of the whole Easter-tide, and there are two copies of paintings reproduced in photogravures. The binding is delicate gray cloth, with purple Easter lilies with gilt centres.

Blind, Mathilde. Madame Roland. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 6+218 p. S. cl., $1.
The life of the famous French heroine of revolutionary fame, born 1754, and who suffered death on the guillotine, Nov. 9, 1793. All the details of her romantic history are told in Miss Blind's most enthusiastic vein. A sketch of the French revolution, and the rise, purpose, and tragic fate of the Girondists, serve as the framework.

A ballad founded on fact relates how an ancient dame, in going to Fakenham mistakes a most innocent object for a ghost; winds up with a little moral tag, throwing discredit upon other goblin tales. Every other page is a picture

Blow, Susan E. A study of Dante, with an introduction by W: T Harris. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 18+102 p. D. cl., $1.25.
The author holds that the "Divina Commedia" "is the outcome of a profound and exhaustive reflection upon the facts of the moral world. The 'Inferno' traces the history of the soul, as, emptied of God, it becomes progressively filled with self: the 'Purgatorio' shows us the gradual emptying of self, and the 'Paradiso' the filling of the soul with God." In other words, the three main divisions treat "of the corruption of the will, the purifying of the will, and the perfection of the will."

The rather stereotyped device of a fortune being left a young man on condition of his marrying a wife of his grand-aunt's choosing is the motive. "Major Frank" is the unconventional heroine, bred in barracks, and gaining her nickname from her wild, boyish ways. Holland is the scene of the story, the author deriving a great deal of local color therefrom.

Bowen, Eliza A. Astronomy by observation: an elementary text-book for high schools and academies. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 90 p. maps and il. Q. bds., $1.17.

This book has grown out of actual school work, in which it was the teacher's object to make pupils studying elementary astronomy observe and think. The following are its chief peculiarities: 1. An efficient, easy, well-tried plan for teaching the constellations is described. 2. Careful directions are given when, how, and where to find the heavenly bodies; their motions are described in the order in which they can be seen by an observer, and in familiar language. 3. The student is excited to thought. Facts are stated first, theory afterward, as a deduction from the facts. The selection of subjects for the student's thinking is a little different from that of other school astronomies. The general principle governing this selection is to make the student understand what he can see. The work is handsomely printed and full of illustrations and finely colored maps.

Prof. Boyesen had for many years been ambitious to write a history of Norway, "chiefly because," he says, "no such book, worthy of the name," existed in the English language. So when the publishers of this series proposed to him to write the "story" of his native land, he eagerly accepted their offer. The story, however, according to their plan, was to differ in some important respects from a regular history, dwelling particularly upon the dramatic phases of historical events, and concerning itself but slightly with the growth of institutions, and sociological phenomena. It therefore necessarily takes small account of proportion, more space being given to the national hero, Olaf Tryggvesson, than to many of the kings.

The one thing needful, above all others, in a woman's life, is "love," so the author says. She writes a book to illustrate her theory, placing the scene in an old English castle, and taking her characters from the very highest social ranks. "Stella," a young girl rescued by Lord Lashmar from a burning building, and supposed to be of ignoble birth, turns out to be the heir to an old Spanish name and to a fortune. Lashmar adopts her, and the many changes and vicissitudes in her life occupy the larger part of the volume.

The first issue in the series, which justifies its name of "rainbow" by brilliancy and profusion of color. The story is laid in Spain and England during the closing days of the last century. The author has almost given away the plot in the preface, but we refrain from doing so here, as the story is worth reading, giving a truthful description of the national prejudices on which the plot hinges. "The sins of the father shall be visited on the children" sums up the exciting story. There is a vivid description of the plague in Venice.

The aim in preparing this book has been to bring together a collection of pieces of intrinsic literary excellence and with reference to their suitability as declamations and recitations. They have been selected from a large number of authors, and present a wide range of style, and are conveniently short.

Branch, Oliver E., comp. The national junior speaker; consisting of declamations and recitations for pupils from ten to sixteen years of age. N. Y., Baker & Taylor, 1886. 9+168 p. S. cl., 75 c.

Branch, Oliver E., comp. The national primary speaker; consisting of declamations and recitations for pupils from five to ten years of age. N. Y., Baker & Taylor, 1886. 9+124 p. S. bds., 50 c.

The first volume of an entirely new series of speakers. Hackneyed extracts have been thrown aside, and the standard orators represented by fresh selections from their works; while space has been given to those pieces which have most recently gained the favor of public readers and elocutionists as best adapted to declamations.

Nine eminent authors are described belonging to six different nationalities. The author says in his preface "In some of these essays the individuality of the author is represented as exhaustively as possible; in others, an attempt has been made to present the man in actual person before the eyes of the reader; some are purely psychological; others biographical and historical." The writers chosen are Paul Heyse, Hans Christian Andersen, John Stuart Mill, Ernest Renan, Esaias Tegnér, Gustave Flaubert, Frederick Paludan, Müller, Björnstjerne Björnson, and Henrik Ibsen. A portrait accompanies each sketch. The translation is excellent

"It is intended mainly for ministers of the gospel and theological students, though it is hoped that Sabbath-school teachers and thoughful laymen will find much in its pages that will help them to a proper understanding of the Scriptures. A concise and comprehensive statement of the Messianic idea precedes each passage or group of passages, and the foot-notes are abundant, and contain much technical information for the Hebrew student which would puzzle the ordinary reader in the general body of the text. There is a freshness about the book which will excite the discussion the author so generously courts, and those who differ from him must acknowledge his industry and candor."—Boston Gazette.

Brinkerhoff, H: R. Nah-nee-ta: a tale of the Navajos. Wash., D. C., J. H. Soulé & Co., 1886. 7+236 p D. cl., $1.50.

For several years after the late war, the author was stationed with his regiment in western New Mexico, in the immediate vicinity of the country occupied by the Navajo Indians. He made a study of their customs, religious beliefs, superstitions, etc., which he has embodied in a romantic tale. The railroad and the encroachments of the white man are quickly wiping out the peculiarities of the Navajos; hence, in the light of history this volume has special value.

Brooks, E. S. Chivalric days, and the boys and girls who helped to make them. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 8+308 p. il. O. cl., $2.

Mr. Brooks has pursued the same plan in this book that made his "Historic boys" so popular. Taking an interesting event in history he expands it into a most delightful story, adding fictitious characters where needed to fill in and fill out the historical details. Of the stories presented three have already appeared in the pages of St. Nicholas, viz., "The story of the field of the cloth of gold," "The cloister of the seven gates," "The little lord of the manor." The others have been especially written for this volume. They are "Cinderella's ancestor," "The favored of Baal," "The page of a princess," "The tell-tale foot," "The boys of Blackfriars," "The rede of the elves," "How the queen dined without eating," and "Monsieur, the captain of the Caravel." The volume is handsomely printed and rich in illustrations.

Brooks, E. S. In Leisler's times: an historical story of Knickerbocker New York; il. by W: T. Smedley. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., 1886. 299 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Though designedly for young folks' reading, this volume is a careful and minute study of an hitherto half-obscured and neglected phase of American history, and will be given a permanent place in historical literature. It not only clears up the name and fame of a genuine patriot, Jacob Leisler, the very first "people's Governor" in America, who was tried and executed for treason, but it also deals with the beginnings of self-government by the people, and republican representation. The action of the story employs the young folks of several prominent Knickerbocker families, and the incidents and scenes are highly dramatic, but yet appertain to the political interests of the time. Careful studies of Old New York localities have been made, and the modes and forms of early Knickerbocker speech and custom seem to have been faithfully reproduced, all of which testify of much patient consultation of old maps, annals, letters and records.

Brooks, E. S. In No-Man's land: a wonder story; with 72 drawings by F. Childe Hassam. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1885.] 6–304 p. D. bds., 75 c.

"Ruthie," the little heroine, is a similar creation to little Alice, the heroine of "Alice in Wonderland." "Ruthie" begins her journey in a horse-car, apparently falls asleep, and then her adventures begin. A squirrel and a billy-goat accompany her with many jests and odd puns to the jumping-off place, a little leap from which brings her into "No-Man's land." The incidents and characters here are all on the marvellous, and related with a keen sense of fun.

Brooks, H: M. The olden time series; gleanings chiefly from old newspapers of Boston and Salem, Mass.; selected and arranged, with brief comments, by H: M. Brooks. V. 1, Curiosities of the old lottery. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 3+73 p. il. S. cl., 50c.

As the title says, "gleanings chiefly from old newspapers of Boston and Salem," about lotteries and the happy drawers of prizes, in the "olden time." The clippings are occasionally quite amusing, and have a special value in the light of history, furnishing, as they do, evidence of the doings of our staid Puritan ancestors. This is the first volume of a new series, the volumes of which will contain various historical material concerning curious punishments and advertisements, the New England Sunday, etc.

Brooks, H: M., ed. The olden time series; gleanings chiefly from old newspapers of Boston and Salem, Mass., selected and arranged with brief comments. No. 2, The days of the spinning-wheel in New England. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 7+99 p. S. cl., 50 c.

Advertisements relating to all sorts of things. The editor says of them: "Our desire is to illustrate, in the very words of the people of the period we refer to, the views they entertained of economy and industry, and how they carried them out."

Brooks, H: M., ed. The olden-time series; gleanings chiefly from old newspapers of Boston and Salem, Mass.; selected and arranged, with brief comments by H: M. Brooks. No. 3, New-England Sunday. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 5+65 p. S. cl., 50 c.

The general plan is similar to the preceding volumes of the series. The extracts relate entirely to the old-fashioned methods of keeping the Sabbath, especially in New England.

Brooks, H: M., ed. The olden time series: gleanings chiefly from old newspapers of Boston and Salem, Mass., sel. and arranged with brief comments by H: M. Brooks. No. 4: Quaint and curious advertisements. Bost., Ticknor & Co, 1886. 8+153 p. il. S. cl., 50 c.

Brooks, H: M., ed. The olden time ser: gleanings chiefly from old newspapers of Boston and Salem, Mass.; with brief comments. No. 5, Some strange and curious punishments. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 4+90 p. S. cl., 50 c.

These newspaper clippings show the various cruel punishments that our New England ancestors bestowed upon the most trivial as upon the most serious offences. They are most interesting reading.

Brooks, H: M., ed. The olden time series: gleanings chiefly from old newspapers of Bost. and Salem, Mass.; sel. and arranged with brief comments. No. 6, Literary curiosities. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 127 p. S. cl., 50 c.

These "literary curiosities" relate to a variety of subjects; there are notices of deaths and weddings, advertisements of books, anecdotes of the time, odd and humorous verses, etc., etc.

Broughton, Rhoda. Doctor Cupid: a novel. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1887 [1886.] 3+403 p. D. hf. cl., 75 c.

A quiet, English country parish is the place, the great house of the neighborhood the scene of meeting of the characters. An English lady of fast tastes, her constant attendant, John Talbot, Freddy Ducane, of flirting tastes, and two orphan sisters of means, living alone, are the chief actors in this love story. Visiting at country-houses, big dinners, harvest balls, moonlight walks, are the chief events. At one time the scene shifts to Oxford and the circumstances are of interest. The devotion of the orphan sisters to each other, and the devotion of Lady Betty to her son, are the motives of a story often told in the sensational key peculiar to the author.

Brown, T. Edwin, D.D. Studies in modern socialism and labor problems. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 3-273 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A course of lectures delivered last winter by the pastor of the First Baptist Parsonage, Providence, R. I. They aim to illustrate his conviction that true economic principle and right economic action are intimately related to Christian morality His first discourse inquires, Is there a social problem? and What has Christianity to do with it? Following is a brief history of modern socialism: the socialists' indictment against modern society, and a statement of what the socialist demands. He asks, "Is revolutionary socialism an impending peril?" Answering that it is, if the complaints of the discontented are not listened to and their wrongs righted. The errors and truths of socialism are pointed out, trades unions and the knights of labor, industrial co-operation, and the responsibilities of wealth discussed. The concluding chapters relate to the church and the workman; personal morality an industrial force; and a survey of the field. A bibliography covering nearly 40 pages of the topics referred to in the work is a valuable feature

Brown, Helen Dawes. Two college girls. Bost., Ticknor & Co, 1886. 325 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Although ending with a promise that foreshadows a marriage, this is not a love story. Almost all of the narrative occurs within the precincts of a young woman's college. Edna Howe is introduced in her dull, circumscribed New England home, with her eager desires for a higher education. The decision is arrived at that she is to go to college, and ways and means devised. Her life here is described from the first three days, when she goes through her examination, till, her course completed, she delivers the valedictory address. Her roommate, Rosemand Mill, is a clever, flirty Chicago girl, apparently Edna's opposite in every way. But under a flippant exterior a warm heart and an earnest purpose are discovered. The story is an excellent one for young girls—natural, healthy, and real, describing college life just as it is.

Browne, Francis F., ed. Bugle-echoes a collection of poems of the civil war; northern and southern. N. Y., White, Stokes & Allen 1886. 336 p. D cl., $2.

This collection, begun several years ago for the compiler's personal satisfaction, grew so in extent and interest that its publication was thought to be justified by the demand for books relating to the war, and by the literary and historical value of the material. Its aim has been "to present a body of the really notable poetry which the war evoked: a record of the feelings and experiences of that heroic epoch, as they were wrought into lyrical expression. Time enough has elapsed to enable the war-poems on either side to be read without resentment; and hence no piece is excluded for its political sentiments, if it has sufficient poetic merit" The arrangement of pieces is in the main chronological according to subjects. Notes in many cases accompany the poems, giving dates and facts, to help the reader to a better understanding of the poems. Index of authors. Handsomely gotten up, with full gilt edges.

"This work," says the author, "though constructed on a different method, may be regarded as a companion to my work on 'The parabolic teaching of Christ,' published a few years ago In the fifth and sixth lectures I have considered from my point of view at considerable length a large number of the miraculous narratives, and made observations on nearly the whole of the narratives of this character contained in the Gospels. My object in these portions of the work is not to expound homiletically the whole narrative in which a miracle is recorded, but to inquire whether the event recorded be indeed a miracle. To prevent misapprehension, readers are requested to note that throughout the discussions in this volume the Gospels are regarded not from the view point of a strict doctrine of inspiration, but from that of substantial historicity It is not dogmatically the highest point of view, but it is that which is most genuine to apologetic inquiries.'

"Heaven is but an advance on the earth we now." Mr. Grizzle is supposed to be possessed of a spiritual double and can at any moment travel through space and look upon things in various worlds from different standpoints. His body gets into a trance on one occasion and lies for five days mourned by his friends When this body revives, it is found that although apparently only five days dead, Mr. Grizzle's soul has spent a whole fortnight in heaven. This heaven is supposed to be located on the planet Jupiter and Chicago to be its chief city. All theories of modern life are discussed by the giants of that region and Socialism receives special attention and is proved rather a failure. The book shows ingenuity and needs most careful reading to be understood. It is most "unconventional" to call it a novel.

Bunner, H. C. The midge. N. Y., C. Scribner's Sons, 1886. 4+235 p. D. cl., $1.

The editor of Puck has succeeded in writing a witty, humorous, and tender story of life in the French quarter of New York City, which extends from Broadway to Sixth Avenue and from Washington Square south to Prince Street, and is almost an unknown region to the cultured readers of fiction living in the same city. A college-bred physician, whose only practice is for cases of charity; "the midge," a little girl of twelve, whom he adopts after the death of her mother, under circumstances which the author describes with admirable minuteness; and a young junior officer in the navy, home on sick-leave, who employs his time in making sketches of great merit, are the leading characters. The story is simple in plot, but every word tells of the author's knowledge of human nature, and proves once more how much "laughter is akin to tears."

The author of "A ride to Khiva" intrusted the MS. of this novel to his private secretary some time before his death, which, occurring unexpectedly, left the work in a somewhat unfinished condition. It is the first novel from his pen, and aims to forecast the future of England, if the demands of Ireland and her colonies are met. It offers a gloomy picture of war and assassination The love scenes are laid in fashionable London society.

Burnham, Clara Louise. Next door. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 371 p. D. cl., $1.50.

"No gentleman" and "A sane lunatic" achieved more than ordinary success. That their author has written a new novel, and one just as bright and clever, may be discovered in reading "Next door." By an odd chain of circumstances, the characters in the story find themselves living in adjoining houses in a modest street of Boston In one house is a party of bachelors, whose comfort is looked after by "Aunt Ann" from the country. Next door are her two nieces, two charming young girls, who have been left by their father's death dependent on their own exertions for a living—Kate, the elder, being the leading soprano in a prominent church. The intimacy between the two families results in a couple of love affairs which, in spite of many obstacles and unexpected incidents, end happily.

It was the aim of the author to present some facts in reference to the resources of our own as well as of other countries of the globe, in decorative stones for architectural purposes, in a work published in 1883, on "Limestones and marbles." The present volume is intended as a sort of supplement, covering the same ground, and illustrating the use of precious stones in decoration, more especially as personal ornaments. In preparing the work use has been of various writers from general literature discoursing upon this topic, and from works exclusively scientific

The little boy who is the hero of this pretty story is born in America of an American mother, his father being an Englishman and the youngest son of an earl Captain Errol, Cedric's father, dies when he is a mere baby, and his mother is left alone in very straitened circumstances. Cedric, however is charmingly brought up, and grows a brave, beautiful, aristocratic-looking boy, with an unfaltering belief in all things American. Though the accidental death of his father's two brothers he becomes Lord Fauntleroy, and is sent for from England by his old grandfather, the earl, who acknowledges him as his heir. The boy is delightfully described his quaint, odd sayings permeating the whole story.

"Unmistakably a romance and none the less so because based upon an historical episode. . . . Passion and pathos, the wild luxuriance of courtly licentiousness, and the simple but strongly marked affections of primitive people are interwoven in effective contrast. Sir Henry Frankland brought with him from the easy-going London of the eighteenth century a Bohemian spirit, which was emphasized by being seen against the background of New England Puritanism and was as far removed from the character of its surroundings as from the tone of the quaint fishing hamlet of Marblehead. As the story moves from these shores to the London of 175- and the rural counties of Nottingham and York, and still again to the fair but Babylonian capital of Lisbon, it is seen that the material with which history supplied the author was rich in romantic and dramatic opportunity."—Boston Post.

Dr. Brinton, in his preface, gives a most interesting account of the Cakchiquels, a nation of somewhat advanced culture who occupied a portion of the area of the present state of Guatemala. The annals were written about 1562 by a native, who had grown to adult years before the whites penetrated his country, and his work displays the language in its pure original form, and also preserves the tribal history and a part of the mythology as they were current before they were in the least affected by European influences. This may be considered one of the most important historical documents relating to the pre-Columbian period.

She is taken care of by a sister, who has married an Italian prince, and when the latter dies she comes to England to live with her oldest sister, who is married to a sedate country clergyman and has her mother-in-law to make her life miserable. Proud, spirited Vera engages herself to the rich man of the place to escape from the tiresomeness of the parsonage. She finds out her love for another before her wedding-day, and the remainder of the book shows her earnest struggle to do right and be a good woman. Her rival's jealousy brings the story to a tragic end.

Miss Melinda after her sister Matilda's death goes on living in the family mansion, reading history, "Scott's Commentaries," and very instructive literature just so many hours a day, as she had been accustomed to do for nearly fifty years with Miss Matilda. She is a descendant of the old Dutch New Yorkers, and knows no people outside her set. One Sunday a young clergyman wakes her up by preaching a sermon on "Spirits in prison," and the good work that could be done among working-girls in New York City. She begins to think and then to help, finding by chance her "opportunity." Mrs. Campbell is well known as a great worker among the working classes, and in this story she proposes several schemes that would seem practical.

Carnegie, Andrew. Triumphant democracy, or, fifty years' march of the republic. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 10+519 p. O. cl., $2.
The earnestness and enthusiasm of this work are quite as remarkable as its thoroughness and accuracy. Coming as it does from the pen of an "adopted citizen of the Republic," it seems to prove Mr. Carnegie's assertion that "there is no class so intensely patriotic, so wildly devoted to the Republic, as the naturalized citizen and his child." It is a review of the progress made during the past fifty years by the United States, and a candid presentation of the present condition, based on the latest statistics, of its manufactures, agriculture, trade and commerce, mining interests, railways and waterways, etc., with chapters on the Republic, the American people, conditions of life, occupations, education, religion, pauperism and crime, art and music, literature, the national balance-sheet, and the government's non-political work. The style is so simple and attractive, and yet so broad and intelligent, that it cannot fail to create for the work a great popular success. Comparisons are made throughout between Great Britain and the United States, and always in favor of the latter.

Caron, Pierre. French dishes for American tables; tr. by Mrs. F: Sherman. N Y., Appleton, 1886. 231 p. D. cl., $1.
The object of this volume is to present to the public a number of attractive receipts in a form so clear and concise as to render their execution practicable and comparatively easy. This is a need that has long been felt, books of value on the subject of cookery hitherto published having generally been written in French, while many that have appeared in English have been so full of technical terms as to harass and puzzle the inexperienced. The writer, who was formerly chef d'entremets at Delmonico's, has endeavored to avoid unusual terms, and to give his receipts in a condensed but perfectly clear form. Good index.

Carr, Christopher, [pseud.] Memoirs of Arthur Hamilton, B. A. of Trinity College, Cambridge; extracted from his letters and diaries, with reminiscences of his conversation, by his friend Christopher Carr of the same college. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. 10+226 p. D. cl., $1.50.
Arthur Hamilton is a fictitious character. The author invents the circumstances and events in the life of a student at Cambridge. His aim is to describe, discuss, and account for the various beliefs, philosophical systems, doubts, religious aspirations and character-shaping episodes in the life of earnest, honest, educated men of the present day. The larger part of the letters and conversations deal with religious questions. Arthur is sketched as a "thorough-going determinist, who was still faithful to the voice of duty, still striving upward. He preserved at heart a serenity that was not thoughtlessness, a cheerfulness that was not hilarity, a humor that was not cynicism." The book will only be appreciated by thoughtful people. It teaches that the end of life is to teach discipline for ourselves and helpfulness for others.

Carpenter, H: Bernard. Liber amoris, being the book of love of Brother Aurelius. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 5-311 p. S. cl., $1.75.
The time of the poem is, generally speaking, the fourteenth century. But the work is not intended to be historic, except by accident. Its object is the glorification of love. There are parts of the poem designedly of a somewhat philosophic or gnomic character. The transition from a pure but lower love into a still purer and higher love is aimed at in the main character, who is a lover, a poet, an idealist; who is placed in sharp contrast to one who is materialistic by nature and by choice. His name is Brother Aurelius, who for many years has been the abbot of a monastery in one of the wild, mountainous regions of Auvergne. He is the inheritor of a volume entitled "The book of love," which he received as a last bequest from a young Provençal knight, Sir Dorian, of Chateau d'Or. He it was (says Aurelius) "who died that I might live, who brought me to these walls, who left me the book and the story of his life." Seated before the midnight fire, in company with Basil, a brother monk, Aurelius depicts the character and career of the young dreamer

A bright domestic story, illustrating not only that the use of strong drink is wrong, but that it hurts others besides those who use it. The heroine, Mabel, a girl of fifteen, is an orphan, who to earn a living becomes a governess in a family, some of the members of which are ignorant and inclined to intemperence. Many of the incidents are quite painful.

This book is appropriately dedicated to Andrew Carnegie, a name identified with coaching throughout the English reading world. The tour chronicled began at Charing Cross, on Monday June 9th, and ended at Ilfracombe Saturday, June 21st. It describes a charming variety of landscape, and recalls some of the most romantic and striking historical episodes in English history. It is not a bare recital of facts, but gains a kind of dramatic interest from the varied and attractive personalities who appear under pseudonyms, some of which are easily guessed. The book is delightfully illustrated by Edward L. Chichester, who enters into the author's spirit, but subordinates his excellent work to the narrative. The cover design is original and appropriate.

Champney, Mrs. Lizzie W. The bubbling teapot: a wonder story; il. by Walter Satterlee. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 3-266 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Flossy Tangleskein was an imaginative little girl, who was so discontented with her "hum-drum-bread-and-butter-spelling-book, American child-life, that she even said to herself she would gladly change to a little Zulu savage, or an almond-eyed Oriental." One day she falls asleep in the studio of an artist friend, to whom she is posing for a picture of a Breton peasant child. In her dreams she has many adventures, and undergoes many transformations, becoming in turn a child of almost every nation on the globe. She has thus a chance to test her wish, but returns to reality quite satisfied that to be a little American girl is about the best of all. The story is an attractive mixture of fact and fiction, information and fairy-land adventures.

The argument of the book is addressed to pastors specially, who are accused by the writer of neglecting the children of their flock and trusting their training in piety entirely to the home and Sunday-school. Several of the chapters were prepared to be read before ecclesiastical bodies, and were also delivered as lectures to the students of the Divinity School at New Haven. It gives a very earnest description of the principles and methods most favorable for the culture of child-piety.

Chesneau, Ernest. The education of the artist; tr. by Clara Bell. N. Y., Cassell & Co., 1886. 12+327 p. D. (The fine-art lib.) cl., $2.

The belief entertained by M. Chesneau that the present decadence of art in Europe is owing to the imperfect education of the artist, is the reason which prompted the preparation of this work. In "education" he does not include technical training—it is the imperfect development of the intellectual powers and moral qualities to which he specially alludes, and also the lack of experience in the various phases of modern life. A number of most interesting chapters makes suggestions, that artists will find full of value in remedying their deficiencies in this way, or in opening up to them new methods of study.

Dr. Chester's book, while showing much of the absurdity of spiritualism, also aims to show the nobleness of true Bible spiritualism, inasmuch as the Scriptures fully answer all proper inquiries concerning the state of the dead; and the communion of saints through Christ and the Holy Spirit yields far more real comfort than could come through any séance though communication were possible. Contains a slight thread of story with a view to make the book more popular.

Church, A. J. Two thousand years ago, or, the adventures of a Roman boy; il. by Adrian Marie. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., [1886.] 6+341 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The main action of this story belongs to a critical and interesting period in the last years of the Roman Republic In 72 B. C. when the young hero, Lucius Marius, is represented as starting to take up an official position in Sicily, Italy was slowly recovering from the effects of the internal struggles which had distracted the state for many years, and abounded in ruined and desperate men. From these, Spartacus, a gladiator, had recuited his army, and was at the height of his power. For many years after this the pirates held almost undisputed possession of the Mediterranean Sea. The story ends with the passing away of the Republic and the division of the empire between Antony and Augustus. Boys will enjoy the book, as it is full of action, and not too learned Purports to have been written in the 17th century by the son of a gentleman of Oxfordshire. The language is the quaint English of the period Beginning with the grand pageant given by the gentlemen of the four Inns of Court of London to King Charles I. and his queen, the reader is carried through the exciting events of Charles Stuart's reign, ending with his tragical death The great fire of London and the plague are well described. In the form of a story.

Mr. Church says "it is difficult to tell the story of Carthage, because one has to tell it without sympathy, and from the standpoint of her enemies." He treats the nation from its obscure legendary origin to its culminating splendor as a rival of Rome, and then to its absolute extinction. The story is a solemn one, but Mr. Church makes it real, and his collaborateur, Mr. Gilman, has also done good work. It is divided into three parts, 1st, Legend and Early History; 2d, Carthage and Greece; 3d, Carthage and Rome. There are nearly fifty illustrations.

Church, Ella Rodman. Talks by the seashore. Phil., Presb., Bd. of Pub., [1886.] 384 p. il. S. cl., $1.25.

The interesting successor to "Birds and their ways," "Flyers and crawlers," "Flower-talks at Elmridge," and "Among the trees at Elmridge." In these the readers are introduced to their neighbors the birds, flowers, trees, and insects. In the present volume they are carried to the seashore, that they may make the acquaintance of the sea-weeds, the polyps, the crabs, the fish, and the many inhabitants of the watery main The author acknowledges special indebtedness to Figuier's "Ocean world" and Moquin Tandon's "World of the sea" for many valuable facts.

Church, Ella Rodman Among the trees at Elmridge. Phil., Presb. Bd. of Pub., [1886.] 3-412 p. il. S. cl., $1.25.

Miss Harson and her pupils are again the characters. They talk this time of the trees of the roadside and forest, and considerable information is offered in the same form as in the previous volumes of the series—"Flower talks at Elmridge," "Birds and their ways," etc.

Church, Ella Rodman. Flower-talks at Elmridge. Phil., Presb. Bd of Pub., [1886.] 320 p. il. S. cl., $1.15

Belongs to the charming series for young people of which "Birds and their ways" and "Flyers and crawlers" were the initial volumes. Botany is the present subject, offered in the attractive form of conversations between Miss Harson, the governess, and her little charges, Malcolm, Edith, and Clara. In long walks through the woods and fields, and in quiet talks in the school-room, no end of information is evolved concerning the flowers and trees of the various months of the year

Cicero, Marcus Tullius. Tusculan disputations; tr., with an introduction and notes, by Andrew

P. Peabody, Bost., Little, Brown & Co., 1886. 23+331 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Contains the five essays: On the contempt of death: On bearing pain: On grief: On the passions: and On virtue sufficient for happiness. They all have a distinctly ethical purpose, and also a clearly defined plan and a regular sequence of thought and reasoning. The translator has used Moser's text. His aim has been, he says, as in previous translations, not to give what is commonly called a literal version, "but to put Cicero's thought unaltered into the best English forms at my command."

Cicero, Marcus Tullius. Select orations, chronologically arranged, covering the entire period of his public life; ed. by J. H and W. F. Allen, and J B. Greenough. Rev. and il. ed., with a special vocabulary. Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 15+250+226+194 p. il D. (Allen & Greenough's Latin ser.) cl., $1.40.

This edition includes the thirteen orations arranged chronologically, and covering the entire public life of Cicero. The introductions connect the orations, and, with them, supply a complete historical study of this most interesting and eventful period. The notes have been thoroughly rewritten in the light of the most recent investigations and the best experience of the class-room. Topics of special importance, as, for instance, the antiquities, are given full treatment in brief essay or excursus, printed in small type. References are given to the grammars of Allen & Greenough, Gildersleeve, and Harkness. The vocabulary, by Prof. Greenough, follows the same plan as his vocabularies to Cæsar and Virgil. Contains a number of good il., maps and plans of ancient Rome.

Clark, J: B. The philosophy of wealth: economic principles newly formulated. Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 12+235 p. D. cl., $1.10.

A general restatement of economic principles in harmony with the modern spirit. The book aims, the publishers state, "to secure a truer conception of wealth, labor, and value; and of production, distribution, exchange, and consumption considered as activities of the social organism." Also, "to lay a foundation for the solution of the labor problem, and to apply the test of economics to the intellectual and spiritual activities of society." Intended for general readers; while not in the form of a text-book, and not a complete discussion of political economy, may be used with advantage by classes whose teachers instruct partly by lectures and partly by topical reading.

This life of Susanna Wesley, the mother of John Wesley, the founder, and of Charles Wesley, the poet, of Methodism, differs from previous ones in not being written from a sectarian nor even from an eminently religious point of view. The author says: "Having been much associated with those who had been in familiar intercourse with Charles Wesley's widow and children, and having heard Susanna Wesley continually spoken of as a woman 'who underwent and overcame' more difficulties than most, the ideal of her life early aroused my imagination. I was delighted with the opportunity of writing her memoir, and have done so with the sympathetic admiration natural to one in whose veins runs some of her blood, however much diluted."

Clarke, Ja. Freeman. The fourth gospel: the question of its origin stated and discussed. Bost., G: H. Ellis, 1886. 70 p. T. cl., 50 c.; pap., 25 c.

The problem in dispute is this: How could John, who was the companion of Jesus, give a view of his character and of his life differing in many essentials from that presented by the other three evangelists? On the other hand, if it was not written by John, how came it to be accepted without protest or objection by the early Christian writers and worshippers? Dr. Clarke fairly states the arguments on both sides, but confesses he has not reached the final solution himself.

Clarke, Ja. Freeman. Vexed questions in theology: a series of essays. Bost., G: H. Ellis, 1886. 6-249 p. D. cl., $1.

The author contrasts the five points of Calvinism and the five points of the new theology, reveals a scientific basis for prayer, and gives his reasons for believing in a future life. These essays refer especially to disputes that have been very severe in New England, on such subjects as the Sabbath, the Bible, the Lord's supper, the divinity of Jesus, etc.

Clarke, Mrs. Mary Cowden. Uncle, Peep, and I: a child's novel. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 4-300 p. il. S. cl., $1.25.

"Bab," a little orphan girl, tells the story. She and her brother "Peep" are adopted by their Uncle John Bruff, an old retired sea-captain, and go home to live in the country with him. The chief event of the story is the uncle's marriage, and the coming of "Aunt Pen," who is a good friend to the little ones. The story has a motive. The incidents, which are related with unusual fulness of detail, are chosen as best developing "graciousness or ungraciousness in manner, kindliness or unaffectionateness in gift and acceptance, the enjoyment that lies in simple and inexpensive pleasures."

Brennan & Co., 1886 600 p steel engs O cl., $5.

Mr. Clay was one of the most prominent statesmen of his day. He was born in Madison Co., Ky., Oct. 19, 1810. He graduated at Yale in 1832. One of his first acts in public life was to oppose the annexation of Texas to the Union. From the first, he was an aggresive opponent of slavery, and in this volume he describes many exciting incidents in connection with his work in this direction. He became editor of the True American, an anti-slavery paper issued in Lexington, Ky., in 1845. He served as a captain in the Mexican war (1846-'47), supported Lincoln in 1860, and became a brigadier-general of the Union army in 1861. He was Minister to Russia from 1862-'69. His autobiography is written with considerable frankness, and will prove an interesting addition to the literature of one of the most exciting epochs in the history of this country. This volume brings the narrative down to 1884. The second volume, which will be issued in 1887 will probably contain chiefly letters and speeches.

Clayton, Graham. Among the hills; or, scenes in Piedmont, Virginia, and other poems. Richmond, Va., J. W Randolph & English, [1886] 3-94 p. D. cl., 75 c.

By the author of "Pen pictures of farm life." The greater part of the book is taken up with a poem called "Odenwall,' being a reproduction in verse of Washington Irving's story of "The spectre bridegroom." The shorter poems deal with the beauties of Virginia scenery.

Class interests, their relations to each other and to governments a study of wrongs and remedies, to ascertain what the people should do for themselves, by the author of "Conflict in nature and life." N Y., Appleton, 1886. 10+172 p. D cl., $1.

The subjects chiefly discussed are corporate and ring monopolies, the currency question, wages, and taxation. The book may be regarded as a sequel to "Reform," by the same author. The aim of "Reform' was chiefly to call attention to the limitations of almost every effort for the improvement of society. The aim of this study is "to show the great need of reform in certain directions, and to point out as definitely as the situation at present seems to warrant how such reform is to be effected"

Clement, Clara Erskine. A handbook of Christian symbols and stories of the saints, as illustrated in art, ed. by Katherine E. Conway. Bost., Ticknor & Co, 1886. 14+349 p. il. O. cl., $2.50

This work has been undertaken to satisfy a want often felt personally by the author and often expressed to her by others. Travelling abroad in Christian lands, symbolic forms are constantly met that are known in a general way to represent the mysteries and facts of the Christian faith, but fail to recall them accurately to the uninitiated beholder. Churches are dedicated to saints hitherto unheard of. The first part of the book is devoted to a treatise on symbolism in art; the second gives legends and stories illustrated in art. There are copies of ten celebrated paintings and sketches of the lives of twenty-two saints. A full index occupies twenty-five pages of the book, and makes it a practical work of reference. It is handsomely gotten up in green cloth and red edges

Clement, Clara Erskine. An outline history of architecture for beginners and students; with complete indexes. N. Y., White, Stokes & Allen, 1886. 8+206 p. il. O. cl., $2.50.

Divided into three parts or chapters. Chapter I treats of ancient or heathen architecture from 3000 B.C. to 328 A.D., and describes the architecture of Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Judea, Greece, Etruria, and Rome Chapter II embraces from A D. 328 to about A.D. 1400, and treats of Christian, Gothic, Byzantine, and Saracenic architecture. Chapter III, embracing from 1400 A.D. to the present time, treats of modern architecture in Italy, Spain, France, England, Germany, and the United States, with a separate paragraph on theatres and music halls. There is a glossary of technical terms and a good index. Profusely illustrated.

Cleveland, Rose Elizabeth. The long run Detroit, F. B. Dickerson & Co., [1885.] 7-146 p. D. cl., $1; $1.50.

This is a novel of two characters; the heroine is a rich, intellectual women of about thirty, who thinks a great deal of her social position and her descent from the very bluest kind of blue blood. She has refused many offers, but is finally wooed by Rufus Grosbeck, a poor and somewhat "seedy"-looking scholar, to whose great intellectual superiority she finally succumbs in the long run

The present work gains in interest in having for its hero an ancestor of President Cleveland. He was a typical seaman of two generations ago, who sailed from Salem in a merchant vessel and had many stirring and remarkable adventures, compared with which the stories of Defoe seem tame. This book has the advantage of being true, and also of depicting the whole life of an American seaman at the beginning of this century. Mr. Cleveland was a type of the better class of the American sailor of that day, of inflexible honesty, indomitable will, courageous and enterprising.

Intended to supplement the teaching of the text-books of descriptive chemistry, and to be used as a companion to them, by those who desire to make the whole subject more practical. It is the result of the author's experience after several years of elementary science teaching. Pt. 1 contains some of the more important rules and principles of chemical arithmetic, followed by a series of problems. Pt. 2 is devoted to an elementary system of qualitative analysis, the best methods having been adopted.

Colby, F: Myron. The daughter of Pharaoh. a tale of the exodus. N. Y., Phillips & Hunt, 1886. 436 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The heroine is not the majestic queen who found the infant Moses in the bulrushes of the Nile, but a later princess, who is referred to but once in the Old Testament, as the wife of Mered, an Israelite. The story aims very successfully to give a picture of human life as it existed in Old Egypt thirty-three centuries ago. The manner and customs prevailing at the time, the style of dress, the tone of thought, the religious sentiments of the people, both high and low, both Egyptian and Hebrew, are depicted with much care. The characters are largely fictitious, a few, however, being historical.

Collignon, Maxime. A manual of Greek archæology, tr. by J: H: Wright. N. Y. Cassell & Co., 1886. 9+384 p. il. D. (The fine-art lib.) cl., $2.

After a brief résumé of the question as to the beginnings of Greek art and as to the early influences that moulded it more or less, its several branches are passed successively in review. Six books are severally devoted to Greek architecture, sculpture, terra-cotta figurines, painted vases, numismatics and glyptics, bronzes and jewels. Each chapter is fully illustrated and headed with brief bibliographies of the subject. The work will be found most useful for pupils in schools and colleges and for amateurs in the study of art.

Collins, C: H. From Highland Hills to an emperor's tomb; episodical, reflective, and descriptive. Cin., Rob. Clarke and Co., 1886. 6+344 p. il. D. cl., $2.

An interesting account of a trip from "Highland Hills," Hillsboro, Ohio, to Europe, the "Emperor's tomb" being that of Napoleon I. The author digresses frequently into the realms of fancy, and gives much quaint and unconventional information of the places visited. In an epilogue he gives a description of Mackinaw Island, a sketch of Father Marquette, and some reflections on Chattanooga and Lookout Mountain.

These essays were originally contributed to the Quarterly Review and to the Cornhill Magazine. As now presented they have been carefully revised and considerable additions made to them. They have been collected in a volume "not because the author attaches undue importance to them, but because he ventures to think that they throw light on two singularly interesting episodes in the political and literary history of the eighteenth century, and because he is willing to believe that, as they are the result of more research than will perhaps appear on the surface, they may be of some use to future biographers of Bolingbroke and Voltaire."

Scene, a large estate on the north-eastern coast of England. Agatha, the heroine, lives with her blind grandmother. Suddenly a telegram tells of Lord Vanecourt's appearance. He is flying from creditors, and hopes to get hold of the family diamonds. The plot is startling, but well conceived. After much tribulation Agatha marries Leonard, a cousin from India. Two or three of the characters are almost new, even to old novel-consumers.

Whether society should recognize a couple who, after being divorced, become reconciled, agree to forget their past difficulties and re-marry, is the question Mr. Collins tries to solve. The "evil genius" who makes all the mischief is the mother-in-law, who feels it is her duty to open her daughter's eyes to her husband's admiration for the governess. The governess' history takes up a good space in the opening chapters, and is full of interest. Her father is tried and found guilty of deliberately causing the loss of his ship in order to gain possession of a large package of diamonds. The trial, the unsuccessful attempt to find the stolen diamonds, the girl's helpless condition, and so on are all told with the detail Mr. Collins has made specially his own. There is much dramatic power shown in the narrative.

The guilty river is the "ugliest, muddiest stream in England." It runs back of an old mill, inhabited by the miller, his beautiful daughter, and a lodger, who is deaf and almost insane with jealousy if any one notices the miller's daughter. The rich young man of the place, after being absent for years, comes into his property—and by accident meets this lodger and learns his strange story The details of mystery are worked up in the author's skilful way. The denouement is a surprise. The question of heredity is finely handled

Designed to aid the student in getting a clear idea of the animal kingdom as a whole, by the careful study of a few typical animals. He is first told how to collect and preserve the material for his study. He is then given detailed directions for its examination and dissection. It is not described to him, thus robbing him of the opportunity to develop his own powers of description, but its parts are named, giving barely enough of description that he may be sure to recognize and apply the proper name to each. He is thus led to observe and describe for himself All the animal sub-kingdoms are represented, more attention being paid to those forms which the student is likely to find.

Gabriel Compayré, one of the most distinguished educators in France, was born Jan. 2, 1843, at Albi, southern France. He lectured for many years at the universities of Pau and Poitiers, and issued a number of works on philosophical, social, and political questions. The present work is one of his most important, and, according to the translator "represents very nearly the ideal of the treatise that is needed by the teaching profession of this country." It goes back to education in antiquity and among the Greeks and Romans, the early Christians, and the Middle Ages, and thence down through the various epochs, noting prominent teachers, and educators, and philosophers, and giving an account of their methods and theories. Pestalozzi and Froebel come in for a good share of attention, while the educational methods of to-day are fully described.

Marion Hosmer was a thoroughly selfish woman when she was bereft of husband and fortune; having no resources within herself, she turned to her girlhood's friend, whom time had developed into the unselfish mother of a large family, whose varied characteristics had the power of teaching the widow self-forgetfulness, and she was wont to declare her better days, began in "That Quissett House," the queer, rambling old Home of the Wilders. In the character of Marion Hosmer Mrs. Conklin illustrates extreme selfishness.

Constance of Acadia: a novel. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 368 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The thinnest thread of story serves the author to sift and combine such historical events of the period of the Reformation as took place chiefly in the New Acadia, the sometimes French and sometimes English possessions of eastern North America. Constance is a Huguenot, and her one idea is to make earnest Protestants of her husband's followers. He is Lieutenant-General of Acadia. The descriptions of the Jesuit rule of the day, and of the various plans of Louis XIII. and Charles I. to get supreme control of the new colonial possessions, are historically correct. The author gives copious foot-notes referring to his authorities, and his chief aim is to interest his readers to study up the subject for themselves.

Cook, Jos. Orient: with preludes on current events. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 19+340 p. por. D. cl., $1.50.

The object of the Boston Monday Lectures is to present the results of the freshest German, English, and American scholarship on the more important and difficult topics concerning the relations of religion and science. Mr. Cook has just completed a tour of the world, the journey occupying two years and seventy-seven days. He lectured on an average every other working day. Among the more salient points of the present volume are a study of the character and career of Keshub Chunder Sen and of the contributions of the Brahmo Somaj of India to the science of comparative theology; a consideration of the achievements and probable future of civilization in Australasia; a discussion of the international duties of Christendom and of the prospects of imperial federation in the British empire, etc. The Princeton Review pronounces Mr. Cook "a great master of analysis."

Four essays: "The poet as a teacher," "Tennyson," "Ruskin," and "Browning." In his preface Mr. Cooke disclaims all intention of writing as a professional critic. He says: "I have written of Tennyson, Ruskin, and Browning for no other reason than that I have greatly enjoyed reading their books. I have found them true companions and guides and the best of friends. I have written of them in a sympathetic spirit, and with a desire to find that in them which is most worthy and most characteristic of their genius. In each I have found some pregnant truth and some luminous interpretation of life." Mr. Cooke is the author of several notable literary works, two in particular, on "Ralph Waldo Emerson" and "George Eliot."

Josiah Copley was born in 1803, and was known for half a century as an editor and writer on religious subjects. He was a Presbyterian, and had joined the New Church early in life, but was very liberal to all Evangelical denominations. He died in November, 1884. The papers now offered to the public were originally contributed to the Presbyterian Banner and other periodicals. They include essays on upwards of sixty subjects and show the deeply religious mind of their author.

A general text-book on composition, for the use of colleges and academies. It embraces the usual departments, a very full treatise on "versification" being the work of the Rev. Eugene H. Brady, of St. Xavier College, Cinn. It claims to be exceptionally practical, embracing many suggestive exercises and a copious collection of choice quotations in prose and verse, to serve as models for the imitation of pupils. "Lastly," as the author says, "the work pretends to do what many text-books on rhetoric neglect, and what is really the most important task of all—namely, to educate the heart as well as the head of the student."

They both love the same girl, a very sweet character. A mysterious murder adds to the excitement of the tale. The plot is involved and self-sacrifice is its key-note.

Corson, Hiram. An introduction to the study of Robert Browning's poetry. Bost., D. C. Heath & Co., 1886. 8+338 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The introduction, which extends to about 130 pages, includes papers on the following subjects: The idea of personality as embodied in Browning's poetry; Art as an intermediate agency of personality; Browning's obscurity, and peculiarities of his diction; Browning's art-form, the dramatic of psychologic monologue; Browning's verse; Arguments of the poems. Thirty poems are included in the volume, selected as best representing the following themes of Browning's poetry: love, painting, sculpture, music, poetry, life, and religion. In addition to the arguments of the several poems, there are copious explanatory notes printed under the text. Appended is a bibliography of Browning criticism. The work has been prepared to meet the wants of Browning clubs, private students, and advanced classes in literature in colleges and high schools

Miss Cort left Colorado in 1874, and joining other missionaries on the way, reached Bangkok at the end of the year. Since then she has been living in Siam, devoting herself chiefly to the regeneration and reformation of the natives. She has also made good use of her eyes, observing very minutely the habits, customs, manners, and beliefs of the Siamese. These she describes in a succession of interesting and graphic chapters. Besides the descriptions of the natives and their surroundings the missionary schools form the subject of one chapter, the Presbyterian church in Siam another, and Christian missions a third.

Mrs. Martha J. Coston, the wife of F. B. Coston, U.S.N., was left a widow with two boys at the age of twenty-one, and absolutely without any means of support. Looking over her husband's papers she found "a large envelope containing papers and a skilfully drawn plan of signals to be used at sea, at night, for the same purposes of communication that flags are used by day." Mrs. Coston immediately set systematically to work to bring these signals to the notice of the U. S. authorities; then with the money received from the government she travelled all through Europe and gained personal interviews with all the potentates and influential men of the day, and brought her husband's invention to the attention of every nation. By her effort the "International Code of Coston Signals" was established. She describes her adventures in detail.

The present volume deals with the statesmen whose lives belong, for the most part, to the period of the fatal struggle between Athens and Sparta. The author has limited himself to those statesmen whose political activity belongs wholly to the time preceding the catastrophe of the Athenian armament at Syracuse. They are Ephialtes, Kimon, Perikles, Phormion, Archimados, Kleon, Brasidas, Demosthenes, Nikias, and Hermokrates.

Coxon, Ethel. The long lane: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 222 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 92.) pap., 25 c.

A young artist losing his way in a tramp near the Cornwall coast comes late at night upon a lonely cottage, whose hospitality he is obliged to beg. He is introduced to a charmingly cultivated woman and a beautiful young girl. Of course he falls in love with the girl, who piques his curiosity from the first, her surroundings being so different from her appearance. She has a history, which he only discovers after he has told her of his love, and he is forced to give up all hope of winning her. After "a long, long road of pain" they both confess to having found the true happiness in following the path duty pointed to in place of simply yielding to the moment's desire.

Craik, Mrs. Dinah Maria, [formerly Miss Mulock.] King Arthur: not a love story. N.Y., Harper, 1886. 3–236 p. D. cl., 90 c.—Same, 3–236 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 76.) pap., 25 c.

The Rev. Mr. Trevena, a Cornish clergyman, and his wife are travelling in Switzerland for Mrs. Trevena's health, she having just lost a young child. Her doctor tells her of a patient he is attending, who hates her newborn child and will sell it or kill it. Mrs. Trevena adopts the boy and gives him the pet name of King Arthur in honor of his Cornish ancestor. The child's education begins in the English home, and Miss Mulock gives one of her sweetest pictures of home life. The scenes between the mother and the healthy, happy, boyish boy are exquisitely written. The secret of his birth is revealed to him toward the close, and he is obliged to live with his lawful relations. His adopted mother's love and unselfishness never fail. At twenty-one our hero marries a lovely woman.

Craik, Georgiana M., [Mrs. A. W May.] A daughter of the people · a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 67 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 555.) pap., 20 c.

Michael Standish, a young landscape-painter, comes to King's Weir, an English country village, surrounded by pine groves and "commons deep in gorse and heather." He secures lodgings with an irascible, money-loving farmer, and his beautiful grand-daughter Leah, whose portrait he attempts to paint and names "a daughter of the people." The contrast between Leah and the rich young ladies of the place is finely drawn. The book is a study of true womanliness. After her grandfather's death Leah becomes post-mistress in a shabby London district. The artist finally marries in his own sphere of society.

Crake, Rev. A. D. The House of Walderne: a tale of the cloister and the forest in the days of the barons' wars. N. Y., E. & J. B. Young & Co., 1886. 7+247 p. S. cl., $1.

The twelfth of a series of historical novellettes carries the reader back to the thirteenth century, when the scions of the House of Walderne inhabited an ancient castle in the Sussex woods; the most interest is invested in Hubert and Martin, who were pages of the Earl Simon de Montfort until one became a Crusader, the other a Franciscan friar, and Hubert wins fame by his exploits in the Holy Land, while Martin's lot is cast with his people, the "merrie men of the woods." Many who figured in the barons' wars are introduced; conspicuous among these is the Earl of Warwick, Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester and Kenilworth Castle, Drogo Harenged, and others.

Crawford, Jack. The poet scout. a book of song and story. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 2+181 p. il. and por., D. cl., $2

Captain Jack Crawford was born in England, came over to America quite young, and worked in the coal mines of Pennsylvania until the rebellion broke out, when he immediately joined the army and served through the entire war; afterward went with the Regular Troops to fight the Indians and protect the gold-seekers of Black Hills. He did not learn to read until after he was wounded at Spottsylvania. His poems are simple, but show feeling and humor. There is a chapter to boys warning them against dime novels.

Crowninshield, F. Mural painting. Bost., Ticknor & Co, 1887 [1886.] 7+155 p. il. O. cl., $3.

This book first appeared as "papers" in the American Architect. Notwithstanding its incompleteness its publication is justified by the immediate importance of the subject, the vast scope for mural decoration now offered by the great building activity which is likely to continue for years, and by the very misty ideas that are entertained of its technics by architects and workmen. There are ten full-page illustrations of well-known paintings, and innumerable small illustrations elucidate the text.

Crowninshield, Mary Bradford. All among the lighthouses, or, the cruise of the Golden-rod. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 7+392 p. il. Q. cl., $2.50.

While everybody knows we have a lighthouse system, few, perhaps, especially young people, have ever thought exactly how the lighthouses were managed, or how the United States Government exercised its supervision of them The coast is divided into districts, the first district extending from the Isles of Shoals, Maine, to the St. Croix River. It includes fifty-four lighthouses, and every three months the inspector has to make the round trip to them all, carefully examine into their condition, see to repairs, and pay off the keepers and attendants. The author, who is the wife of Commander Crowninshield, inspector of the first district, has made the journey so often that she is thoroughly familiar with every place visited, as well as with the routine of the business transacted This knowledge has given her the groundwork and material for a most interesting volume. It takes the form of a story, two young lads, Johnny Braine and Cortland Delano, being the guests of the inspector, Commander Gordon, who has also his little daughter Violet on board the Golden-rod Cruger, Mary A den of thieves, or, the lay reader o. St Mark's. N Y, Funk & Wagnalls 1880. 185 p. D pap., 25 c.

A sad story by the author of "Hyperæsthesia," showing the evils resulting from the use of intoxicating liquors. Ralph Meredith, the lay-reader of St. Mark's, loses his life from a brutal blow received in his missionary efforts among the degraded poor of a little country town, and his affianced bride. Alice Carleton, dies broken hearted.

Curtis, G: Ticknor. McClellan's last service to the republic; together with a tribute to his memory. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 150 p. map, D. pap., 30.

Three of the papers in this volume were originally published in the North American Review for April, May, and June, 1880; the tribute appeared in the Star of November 28, 1885. Mr. Curtis offers an able and impartial defence of McClellan's brief military career, based upon facts derived from authentic sources; he believes if the re-inforcements asked for by the General, while at Harrison's Landing, had been sent him, the war would have been ended there and then. He also reviews the apparently unfair treatment of McClellan by the administration.

D., E. A. B. Us three. N. Y., T. Whittaker, 1886. 187 p. il. D. cl., $1.
A simply and pathetically told story, which deals for the most part with the ups and downs of Jack Hill, his widowed mother, and their little dog Puzzle whose pranks give additional interest to the story, until a vacuum is made by his death, when his place is filled by an associate of Jack's, and we leave "Us three" more prosperous than they were in the opening of the story.

Dabney, Virginius. The story of Don Miff, as told by his friend John Bouche Whacker; a symphony of life, edited by Virginius Dabney. 2d ed. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 492 p. D. cl., $1.50.
"Mr. Dabney is an unreconstructed rebel of Virginia and also a lover of music, especially Beethoven's; so that he calls his book a Symyhony, divides it into four movements: Allegro, Scherzo, Allegro Molto and Adagio Assai, introducing each with a bit of the score of the "Eroica" Symphony. This seems to be affectation, but it may have an occult purpose of deep significance. The story of 'Don Miff' is a rambling rhapsody about the delicious life and supremely good society of Virginia before the war, the valor of the Southerners and the cowardice of the Northerners in the war, and the general superiority, moral and mental, of the South over the North since the war."—*Phil. Dahlgren, Madeleine Vinton. The lost name: a novelette. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 222 p. D. cl., $1.
The young man who relates this story is the grandson of a French émigré, who fled from France in 1793, during the Reign of Terror. The interest centres in the young man's efforts to discover who his ancestors were—as his family name has been lost—his grandfather having suppressed it in his flight, feeling an assumed name would be safer. The scene is laid in America.

Rose Caldicott, the squire's daughter, was full of theories and plans for improving the condition of the working people; where she could, she did practical work, teaching them and showing them how to help themselves. One day, while taking a long ramble, she meets with an accident, and is helped out of a ditch by a good-looking mechanic. This young man, "Francis," becomes the hero of the story. Rose in her gratitude offers to give him lessons in botany, etc., and is quite carried away with his intelligence and education, believing him to be a self-educated man of the people. The reader is let into the secret of Francis' identity from the first, but Rose goes on deceiving herself, until by chance the truth dawns on her in a very funny way. Then there is a pretty love tale, and some real experiences narrated of the hardships of a workingman's life.

Daly, Myrtilla N. A moral sinner. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 182 p. D. (Cassell's rainbow ser.) pap., 25c.
The dramatis personæ are, with one exception, the guests of Lady Davenport. The story opens in the dining-room, where her friends are breakfasting and discussing the absentee, Lord Thornberry, whose non-appearance casts a momentary gloom upon all but Florence Andrews, who publicly avows her dislike of his lordship for a trivial offence committed against herself, and refuses to be presented. This determines him to win her love at any cost, so he masquerades in priestly attire to gain his purpose. Just as this effort is nearing success, Florence's encounter with a former lover has strange results, which cause much unhappiness to both lovers before their final reunion ends the story.

Davidson, J. Thain, D.D. Forewarned—forearmed. N. Y., A. C. Armstrong & Son, [1886.] 6+286 p. D. cl., $1.25.

"Talks with young men" was received with such favor that the author has been induced to issue another series of these homely addresses, preached during a ministry of twenty years in a London parish. The author claims that no place surpasses a metropolis in its variety of temptation, nor, on the other hand, in the number of advantages and wholesome safeguards it provides. Therefore he thinks all young men should be clearly warned and kindly guided.

Davidson, Ja. Wood. The correspondent. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 110 p. S. cl., 60 c.

It is the aim of this little book to give, in convenient and immediately accessible form, the main points needed by the American correspondent or writer of letters. It is arranged alphabetically for ready reference, under the leading words, and the information given as briefly and as clearly as possible. The best authorities available have been consulted, and reasons carefully but briefly stated whenever practicable.

A little essay, first pub. in 1884; the edition was almost immediately bought up, the book having been for over a year out of print. Miss Dawes believes in the possibility of the re-establishment and rehabilitation of the Jewish nation. A great variety of causes are enumerated why the Jewish element should unite in the formation of a nation in reality as well as in name; and where, the wide world over, she asks, is there so favorable a spot as Palestine?

The object of this manual is to furnish to students, collectors, and tourists in Canada an outline of the classification of the animal kingdom, with examples taken, as far as possible, from species found in that country. This edition has been largely extended, and now includes vertebrate as well as invertebrate animals.

Deane, Mary. St. Briavels: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 70 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 541.) pap., 20 c.

The year 1702 is the time of this quaint story, which reproduces with much power and realism the way of talking and the customs and costumes of the past century. The story is laid in the Hundred of St. Briavels, near the Forest of Dean, England, and is rich in incidents. The celebrated Warren Hastings is introduced.

Death (The) of Hewfik Pasha: a confession. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 89 p. D. cl., 60 c.

A story which claims to be based on fact, but which is apparently wholly fictitious. The hero is a young Englishman who is represented as having dined with Hewfik Pasha, ex-Prime-Minister of the Sultan of Turkey, the day he was assassinated. He is arrested on suspicion, but he is proved innocent of the murder. Why the Pasha was assassinated and the circumstances which led up to the deed profess to be told by a beautiful woman, who is the heart of the mystery.

Demigod, (A): a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1887 [1886.] 3–337 p. S. cl., $1.

The great-great-great-great-grandfather of the hero was a wealthy Englishman whose craze was the improvement of his own race. He goes to live in the purest atmosphere of Greece, marries a handsome barbarian, and enforces among his children the strictest code of mental and physical health. The fruit of the present generation is the demigod Hector Vyr, who is the perfection of all that is good and best physically and mentally, but utterly unconventional in all his thoughts and actions, hence a very interesting study. He is introduced into the story through the medium of an American family travelling in Greece, who are made prisoners by the bandits, and held for ransom, and whom Hector Vyr rescues. As there is a lovely American girl in the party, who is passionately loved by her cousin, and who attracts both the captain of the bandits and Hector Vyr, there is no lack of plot and incident.

Demos: a story of English socialism. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 104 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 522.) pap., 25 c.

A strongly written novel, in which the principal hero is an avowed advocate of socialism. He is a workingman, with a limited education, who unexpectedly inherits a fortune. It had been his uncle's design to leave his money to an adopted son, Hubert Eldon, but he dies suddenly, and no will is found. Richard Mutimer, the socialist, then inherits, and brings his mother and brothers and sisters to Wanley Manor. Their unfitness for their position and Richard's attempts to carry out his theories bring about much vexation and trouble. In the midst of it all the missing will comes to light, and the Mutimers go back to obscurity.

Dewey, J: Psychology. N. Y., Harper, 1887 [1886.] 11+427 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Written expressly for use in class-room instruction, the author being assistant professor of philosophy in Michigan University. He aimed in preparing his book "to avoid all material not strictly psychological, and to reflect the investigations of scientific specialists in this branch." He has also endeavored to arrange the material in such a way as "to lead naturally and easily to the problems which the student will meet in his further studies, to suggest the principles along which they shall find their solutions, and above all to develop the philosophic spirit." An excellent feature is found in the notes at the end of the chapters, wherein is given the whole literature of that special part of the subject, for reference or further study on the part of the pupil.

Dickinson, Mary Lowe. The amber star; [also,] A fair half-dozen. N. Y., Phillips & Hunt, 1886. 365 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A strange story of shipwreck and adventure opening in the White Mountains near the Franconia Notch, shifting to Rome, Italy, and returning again to this country; the concluding scenes taking place in New York city and in the mountains. The "amber star" is the means of finding the mother of a little girl, who has numerous vicissitudes after being separated, through accident, from her mother, after arriving at New York on a foreign steamer. The child becomes the charge of an Italian organ-grinder, and suffers many hardships before she finds a happy, peaceful home near the Franconia village.

Dictionary of the Holy Bible; for general use in the study of the scriptures; rev. and enl. ed. N. Y., American Tract Soc., [1886.] 720 p. il. 16 maps, O. cl., $2.

Since the first publication of this work great progress has been made in Biblical researches; the land of the Bible has been most thoroughly explored and the revised version of Scripture has appeared; the admirable Bible Dictionary of Dr. W: Smith with those of Fairbairn, Fausset and others have made a new era in Bible study. All these recent works have been used in preparing this revised Bible Dictionary. A large proportion of the articles have been rewritten, many new illustrations have been added, and improved maps, and, in this revised and enlarged form, the dictionary is almost a new work.

Dostoyevsky, Feódor M. Crime and punishment: a Russian realistic novel. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 3-456 p. por. D. cl., $1.50.

The crime is murder committed by the hero and described in sickening detail. The victims are an old, miserly pawnbroker and her half demented sister. The object is robbery. The punishment begins in the hero's conscience, leading him to imagine every variety of suspicion and persecution. The heroine, a young girl, who, for the sake of keeping her step-sisters from starvation, sacrifices her womanhood, and finds her strength for her horrible life in her firm belief in the Christian religion, is a remarkable creation. She induces the hero to confess his guilt and finally accompanies him to Siberia, where she spends seven years with him and wins him over to a belief in all good things and an ambition to lead a new and better life.

Doubleday, C. W. Reminiscences of the "filibuster" war in Nicaragua. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 8+225 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Mr. Doubleday was a trusted lieutenant of Gen. Walker. He gives a stirring account of an episode in American history which caused much excitement thirty years ago. He describes Walker as an enthusiast of extraordinary courage, who contended for the empire of Central America in order to overthrow the ecclesiastical tyranny established there. Fired by success, Walker aimed at self-aggrandizement and absolute empire and Doubleday left him and expressed his disapproval. Soon after, Walker was shot and his band of "filibusters" scattered.

Michael Barney, an uneducated, honest, warm-hearted Irishman, wins the affections of the county squire's adopted daughter, marries her, and brings her to America because her people disown her. He begins a grocery business and does well enough to buy his wife a piano and engage Signor Porta to instruct her. Porta elopes with the wife and child, takes passage for Europe, the ship gets on fire, the child and Porta are saved, the mother lost. "Mike's" efforts to find his child and Porta's villainy furnish the rest of the details.

Doyle, Sir Francis Hastings. Reminiscences and opinions, 1813-1885. N. Y., Appleton, 1887 [1886.] 7+420 p. O. cl., $2.

"A most entertaining volume, written when past seventy by one who in his day has known many of the most eminent Englishmen. Sir Francis was a friend and schoolmate at Eton of Gladstone and Arthur Hallam, and gives many recollections of their great debates together. He was also with them at Oxford, and afterwards a Fellow there. Then he became a barrister, and he narrates many of his adventures while on the circuit. Being comparatively poor, he was forced soon after his marriage to enter the civil service, and thus was cut off from active Parliamentary life. He was and is a strict Tory in his opinions. In 1867 he was elected Professor of Poetry at Oxford, and some of his lectures there have been published. At the close of a long life he frankly asserts that he has lacked that definite aim and steadfast purpose which, with his natural abilities and education, might have secured him a high place in literature or politics."—New York Evening Post.

Drake, S: Adams. The making of New England, 1580-1643. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 9+251 p. il. and maps, D. cl., $1.50.

Takes up the early history of each New England state separately, and tells its story from its first discovery, exploration, and settlement, until the period when a stable government was established. Special emphasis is given to everything relating to the home life of the pioneer settlers and to their various avocations, and a liberal use made of descriptive notes, maps, plans and pictorial illustrations, that a thorough knowledge of the subject may be obtained. The style is very attractive, giving to the work all the charm of a romance. Teachers will find it an excellent supplement to the common-school text-book, filling out and vitalizing the bare outlines of the subject which are generally embraced there. The book aims to meet the want of brief, compact, and handy manuals of the beginnings of our country, and to occupy a place between the larger and the lesser histories.

Major Peterson belonged to the East India service when he concluded to accept the offer of his brother, and send Julius to England to be educated; the lad set sail from Delhi on the "Madagascar," which was wrecked after leaving Calcutta; the few survivors were washed ashore and taken captive by the Caffres; excepting Julius they all sink into oblivion, the latter won favor with the savages; who named him Umkunhinglaws, and created him "The white chief of the Caffres."

Dreyspring, Adolphe. Easy lessons in French, according to the cumulative method adapted to schools and home instruction. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 142 p. il. O. cl., 70 c.

"The success of 'The cumulative method' in Germa being assured, the adaptation of the system to the French ian guage was but a foregone conclusion. The distinctive features of the present volume are: 1. Presentation of the normal phases of the language first. 2. Selection of its elementary material, with special reference to what is usually in sight. 3. Development of the first needs of speech. 4. Unfolding of the language out of itself. 5. A vocabulary within reasonable bounds. 6. A constant revolving of the accumulating material under ever-varied forms and new combinations. 7. Special care to interest the student and to preserve his enthusiasm for the study."—Introduction.

Dreyspring, Adolphe. Easy lessons in German: an introduction to the cumulative method; adapted to schools and home instruction. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 103 p. il. D. cl., 70 c.

The bulkiness of Prof. Dreyspring's favorite "Cumulative method" has been the chief cause for the preparation of this abridgment for younger scholars, which also embraces some of the features of the authors "Verb-drill." Illustrations have been added, to render the lessons more attractive and impressive.

Drewry, Edith Stewart. Baptized with a curse: a romance. N Y., Harper, 1886. 212 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 94.) pap., 25 c.

The story is supposed to have been given in manuscript to the man who gives it to the public and fills out the breaks to make it a connected whole. There is much detective work and all the chief characters are more or less given to making mysteries. The plot is complicated. The hero is "the slave of his atheism and his pleasures." At the last he becomes afraid of his scoffing infidelity and turns to the Christian faith on the eve of meeting his terrible fate. The two heroines and three heroes get but little peace and pleasure.

Du Boisgobey, Fortuné. A fight for a fortune, from the French. Chic., Rand, McNally & Co., 1886. 191 p. D. pap., 25 c.

Mériadec Léridan, after a life of adventure as a privateersman, retires to the coast of Britanny to enjoy his immense fortune, hoping to end his days quietly and peaceably. An accident kills him, just as he is thinking of disposing by will of his money, and his death brings to light a number of poor and rapacious nephews and nieces, who will inherit in case of no will being found. A faithful friend of Léridan's picks up in his room a half-destroyed paper yellow with age, written by himself, in which he names a woman as his sole heir. This mysterious person, and the fact that almost a million of the old man's money must be found, point to secrets in his life, of which his most intimate friend was ignorant. The story shows how the mystery was unravelled, the money found, and the right heir brought to light.

Du Boisgobey, Fortuné. The Matapan affair; from the French. Chic., Rand, McNally & Co., [1886.] 208 p. D. pap., 35 c.

The romantic lover and his faithful friend, an impoverished count and family, the aristocratic marchioness, the wealthy parvenu, the very just magistrate, and last but not least, the villain Baron Matapan, with his faithful servant Ali, are the several types of Parisian character represented. The story opens with a conversation between Jacques de Courtaumee and Albert Dautrelaise, which gives a glimpse of a dawning love-affair, and then takes the reader at once to the scene of the story, a house on the Boulevard Haussmann, where the startling incident occurs which leads to the arrest of Julian de la Calpreneede. Moved to untiring zeal by his love for Arlette, Dautrelaise succeeds in unravelling the mystery surrounding the "Matapan affair," when Julian is released, and Dautrelaise wins the gratitude of the count and the hand of Arlette.

Du Bose, Rev. Hampden C. The dragon, image, and demon; or, the three religions of China, Confucianism, Buddhism, and Taoism; giving an account of the mythology, idolatry, and demonolatry of the Chinese. N. Y., A. C. Armstrong & Son, 1887 [1886.] 468 p. il. O. cl., $2.

The author was for fourteen years a missionary at Soochow. "These dark chapters are written," he says, "in the hope that some small impetus may, by the facts presented, be given to Christian missions in China." The work is a careful and thorough study of the three religions of China. "The writer has drawn his water from native wells, the facts being mostly gathered from Chinese sources. The pen is not held by one seated in a professor's study, but by a plain man who daily walks to and fro among idolaters, and testifies of what he has seen and heard."

Dukes, Edwin Joshua. Along river and road in Fuh-Kien, China; with map and il. from sketches by the author. N. Y., American Tract Soc., [1886.] 348 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The endeavor has not been to represent China from the special point of view of the politician, merchant, or missionary, but simply to describe the scenes of daily life as they appear to one moving to and fro among them. The chapters are mostly compiled from notes made when travelling upon mission journeys and from letters written to friends in England. The author thinks that in a few years the "Chinese question" will become a great international problem, which it will need all the wisdom of Western countries to solve.

A graphic account of the many Indian wars in which the United States has been involved during the past fifty years, in its attempt to possess and settle the Rocky Mountain region. Among the chief events described in detail are the murder of the early missionaries, the Ash Hollow and the Cheyenne expedition, the Mountain Meadow affair, and the tragedy of the Lava beds, with Custer's and Jenney's expeditions to the Black Hills. Written with unusual earnestness and a full appreciation of the injustice done the Indian by our government. The volume contains maps of the Indian Reservations of the United States and of the Northwest in 1841, a bibliography, and an elaborate index.

Dunning, Charlotte, [Charlotte D. Wood.] A step aside. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 2+333 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A poor French drawing master, his talented, comfort-loving daughter of nineteen, their boarding-house keeper, who keeps a house on a side street running off First Avenue, in the heart of New York City, and two or three more of her boarders are the characters in this realistic drama, representing life among the respectable, educated poor. A poor clerk in a manufacturing company and his employer both fall in love with Miss Valrey, and she, after engaging herself to Langmuir, the clerk, takes "a step aside" for a few months into the comforts of his employer's family, where she is teaching French to a very disagreeable little mischief-making girl. Langmuir gets into business trouble, and then Miss Valrey returns to him; they marry on nothing, and go to live in the country. There is but little action, but the story of irksome poverty is well told.

In this edition of the index some new features have been introduced. To render the alphabetical sequence more conspicuous, all groups of titles under headings or names of authors have been set in nonpareil type, while the headings and names of authors appear in brevier antique. The table of final pages in each number, showing the month and year corresponding to volume and page references in the index, will be especially useful to those who have unbound sets. The index contains fifty-one thousand references. While the new material, referring to the last ten volumes (1861–70), covers one seventh of the magazine text, the new matter introduced in the index forms one fifth of the present work, including a large number of new references to the earlier volumes not inserted in the previous editions. Each contribution appears under author, title, and subject or class heading. Cross-references are unusually full and elaborate. Printed only on one side of the sheet.

The scene is laid on the island of Guernsey, the hero, Gaston Arbuthnot, being an artist who has married a beautiful dressmaker, upon whom society turns its back. His cousin, Geoffry Arbuthnot, is tutor to a young girl who desires to fit herself for college. The story is brightly told, and keeps up the interest to the end.

Edwards, Mrs. Annie. A playwright's daughter: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 133 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 89.) pap., 25 c.

Tania Meredith is an altogether new character study. Her father, an English dramatist, only had one year of happiness with her mother, a beautiful Russian girl, whom he had married in Moscow. He marries again in a little while after her death, and Tania is left with her mother's family to be brought up. When Dion Meredith dies his widow, Tania's stepmother, brings the girl to London, intending, after two years of conventional mourning, to launch her into society. Tania's story begins here, and as it is one of passionate love, with a most tragical and unexpected ending, we will not anticipate its strong interest by further details.

The author, a missionary located on the Skokomish Reservation in Washington Territory, tells of ten years of work among the Twanas, Clallams, and other Indians. He does not try to excite interest and enthusiasm by making an overdrawn picture. Those reading the book will see just what are the difficulties with which missionaries among the Indians have to contend, and just what results they reap after their arduous labors. Mr. Eells gives much interesting information relative to the native religion and superstitions of those for whom he was working. The manners of the Indians, their customs, languages, besetting sins, etc., receive full treatment.

The story of a fiendish revenge perpetrated by the dissipated disinherited younger son of a rich man. He steals his elder brother's child, which bears a remarkable resemblance to his own little girl, and has the same name, and mixes them up hopelessly. The deception is carried on through a long course of years, causing much misery and misconceptions; for though the elder brother at last finds his child, or rather both the children, he receives no proof till toward the end of the book as to which is his own.

Two Neapolitans—a brother and sister—from the very lowest strata of society enter into a scheme to pass themselves off as the heirs to an immense fortune that has laid unclaimed in Paris for a long time. Fortified with forged documents, they leave Italy for France, and are in a little while put in possession of the "twenty millions." As the adventurers are both young and handsome, they at once obtain the entrée to society. Their Aladdin like adventures and dishonest intrigues make a thrilling story, in which, however, they are finally unmasked.

In a quaint, humorous, and, at times, pathetic vein, little Reginald Dacre tells the story of his early bereavement, the advent of Nurse Bundle, how he came into possession of the dog "Reubens," his trip to London, and his friendship for Cousin Polly, with the crowning incidents, a visit to Oxford, the purchase of a "flat-iron for a farthing," and the making of an acquaintance which ripened into a pretty little love affair.

Ewing, Juliana Horatia. Mary's meadow and letters from a little garden, il. by Gordon Browne. N. Y., E. & J. B. Young & Co., [1886.] 96 p. O. bds., 30 c.

In 1883 Mrs. Ewing went to live at Villa Ponente, Taunton, where she reverted to a favorite pursuit of her girlhood—the practical cultivation of flowers—hence the origin of "Mary's meadow." It was her last serial story, published in Aunt Judy's Magazine in 1883–1884, and was followed by "Letter from a little garden," which Mrs. Ewing's death left unfinished. The chief charm of the book is in the blending of humor and pathos when Mary tells how she, with her brothers and sisters, made their "Earthly paradise," a game in which each child assumed a character, and dressed to suit the part. Chris creates much amusement by quaint sayings and his conception of the part "Hose in hose."

Face to face. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 3+396 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Capital and labor are brought "face to face" in this story of the life of Evelyn Pimlico. She is an English girl who comes to America alone under peculiar circumstances. She visits friends at Newport. She meets an old family friend who grows very fond of her and leaves her $15,000,000. Evelyn now tries to make the workmen at her mills contented, builds cottages, attends to sewerage, pays better wages than other mill-owners, etc. She works under the direction of a man who is a radical socialist, a workman, combining the love of luxury of his gentleman father with the brutal instincts of his low-born mother. A satisfactory love story runs through the book. The conversations and arguments about improving the lower classes are most interesting, but the author leaves the great problem as unsolved as ever, and does not commit himself to either side of the carefully presented question.

The hero resembles "Daniel Deronda" in the fact of being "a great unknown." Silas Carston is the chief attraction in the group of characters, of which each seems possessed of an individual mystery. Silas is introduced as a pupil in the school of the Rev. Josiah Porter, where he quickly runs the gamut of schoolboy, usher, and husband of his master's daughter, who gains ascendancy over him by her mesmeric powers, which are as binding as a spell. He finally escapes the strange power of Judith Porter's eyes for a time, and new complications ensue, which lead to the discovery of Silas' identity.

The opening chapter gives the key to the story, which is of the sensational order. A claimant appears for a vast English estate, fortified by undisputable evidence in the way of papers, etc. In a midnight interview with the man in possession he is shot—murdered the reader knows—but the verdict rendered against "Philip Tremaine Bourchier, Esq., M. P.," is "killed in self-defence." All kinds of complications arise from this incident. The murdered man's papers get into the hands of an unscrupulous fellow who pretends to be his son, and who terrorizes over the murderer, until death ends the careers of both. Love and marriage play their parts, and there are two interesting heroines.

The mystery around which the plot revolves is one which had separated a husband and wife for many years. The husband, who was supposed to be dead, lived under an assumed name in an out-of-the-way part of England, his son living with him. It is this boy who tells the story. Becoming wearied of his lonely life, he begs his father to let him go to Oxford. Once launched upon the world, chance brings him to London and in contact with his mother, there being of course no recognition between the pair. How the misunderstanding occurred between the boy's parents and how they are finally reconciled are well told.

Farjeon, B. L. Aunt Parker: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 74 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 513.) pap., 20 c.

The heroine is introduced as a child of ten, who has just lost father and mother, and come under the care of "Aunt Parker," her mother's half-sister. After the reading of the will, finding Lisa's property has been left to the care of two lawyers, who act as guardians, Mrs Parker is furious; then, later, comes to terms with one of them, and by his connivance shuts up Lisa in a private asylum, of which the late Mr. Parker had been in charge. From her eleventh to her twenty-fifth year Lisa suffers at her aunt's hands. All ends happily.

Strange scene, intricate plot, or sensational incident, has no place in this novel: the theme of the story is a friendship formed in Switzerland, which is lost sight of in a quaint little romance which causes an estrangement that leads to a meeting in a strange country a renewal of old vows, and a happy reunion.

Dr. Phillips Brooks says in his introduction: "These sermons and addresses of the Archdeacon of Westminster have the same qualities which have so long won for all that he has had to say an earnest and sympathetic hearing. They are the utterances of him whom we have known so well as the author of the 'Life of Christ,' the advocate of temperance and the preacher of eternal hope. They will appeal to and inspire the same love of God and truth and man, the same thoughtful interest in the things of the Spirit to which his other books have spoken. But this volume will also possess a value and significance peculiarly its own. It is made up for the most part of sermons preached by an Englishman to Americans; that fact cannot fail to be felt by those who read it." The sermons, 14 in number, are those preached in Canada and the U. S. during his recent visit. The addresses are: "Modern education; its sphere and its aims," delivered at Johns Hopkins University; "The Christian doctrine of the atonement and the grounds of Christian unity," read before the Church Congress, New Haven; and the temperance address given in Chickering Hall. Two only of his several lectures are given: "Dante" and "Farewell thoughts on America."

Although written in the early years of the century, the ms. of this work was not identified as the writing of M. Fauriel until recent years. M. Lalanne considers it one of the most important contributions yet discovered to the history of the days preceding the Empire. Fauriel was for a time secretary to Fouché, the Minister of Police, and witnessed most of the scenes he so vividly describes. The attempt to prove Moreau and Georges Cadoudal conspirators, with the striking scenes of the trial, find in him an earnest and truthful historian.

Fawcett, Edgar. The house at High Bridge: a novel. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 3-395 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The house at High Bridge is the home of a successful novelist, his wife, and two daughters. When the story opens the novelist has apparently something on his mind concerning his last novel, which has sprung into instant popularity, while his six previous works had merely helped him to live. Hints are thrown out that the work is not his own, that probably he had stolen the MS. from a friend now dead, and so on, the mystery and interest increasing until explanations are arrived at in the last chapter. The love affairs of his two daughters lighten the mystery which surrounds the father, and which almost ends in a tragedy.

Fenn, G: Manville. The chaplain's craze; being the mystery of Findon Friars. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 206 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 101.) pap., 25 c.

The Rev. Parker Lee was the chaplain of Darkley Model Prison; his craze was getting his reformed convicts situations in respectable families. When a midnight murder is committed at Findon Friars, where one of his protégés is butler, the reader is most ingeniously led off the track into suspecting the butler and Lee's own man Denby, also a reformed criminal, of having committed the crime. The explanation is entirely unexpected and the mystery of the story kept well concealed to the end.

Fenn, G: Manville. Double cunning: the tale of a transparent mystery. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 392 p. D. pap., 50 c.

The scene is laid in Yorkshire. Arthur Lincoln Range, fresh from the States, is a truly English conception of an inhabitant of Uncle Sam's dominion: not a bad fellow, on the whole, frank, manly, and wealthy, lacking only the worldly polish deemed essential in a gentleman. he narrowly escapes death at the dawn of his love affair, and becomes the prey of sharpers, who endeavor to extort money from him by putting him in all sorts of improbable situations, from which he extricates himself by matching his cunning against that of the rogues. There are several love complications to add color to an intensely interesting novel.

The author of "Poverty corner," "Sweet Mace," and "Parson o'Dumford," first awes the reader with the presence of a storm at sea, but this feeling is dispelled gradually as the storm clears, and gives place to curiosity as to the fate of Robert Fleming, and pity for sweet Gillian Dane, bereft of a lover, and goaded into a marriage with Morgan Preiss; here the interest becomes concentrated in the crime of Morgan, and the retributive law which caused Morgan Preiss to be haunted until death with the horror of his own act.

Fenn, G: Manville. This man's wife: a story of woman's faith. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 80 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 548.) pap., 20 c.

The story opens in an English country parish. Christie Bayle, the new curate, makes the acquaintance of the village doctor and his delightful family. He falls in love with the daughter, but she marries a comparative stranger, whom she loves faithfully until the last remnant of affection has been worn out. This man is transported and his wife and child, who is delightfully described, follow him to the other side of the world under the care of Christie Bayle, who remains their faithful friend to the sad end.

Fenn, G: Manville. The vicar's people: a story of a stain. N.Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 4+345 p. S. cl., $1.

Scene laid on the Cornish coast. The vicar's "people" are miners and fishermen. The hero, a mining engineer, has almost made the long unworked mine turn out a paying supply of tin and copper, when the mine is flooded by the villain of the story, from motives of jealousy. There are three heroines, totally different, whose lives meet in well-planned combinations of circumstances. A thoroughly interesting, old-fashioned story of love and adventure, which ends happily.

Feuillet, Octave. Aliette (La morte); from the French by J. H: Hager. N. Y., Appleton 1886. 250 p. D. pap., 50 c.

Bernard de Montauret, Vicomte de Vaudricourt, is a Parisian of the higher type, well educated, attractive, and honorable, but without religious belief. He marries Aliette, his equal in social position and cultivation, but a most devout Catholic. She entertains the design of converting her husband, and concentrates all her fascinations upon this one object, but in vain. When an estrangement that forbodes much future trouble has come into their lives from this religious difference, their little girl's illness makes them acquainted with Dr. Tallevaut and his niece Sabine. Sabine proves to be the "evil genius" of the ill-matched pair. Bernard conceives a wild passion for her, which she returns, and to gratify which she does not scruple to poison his wife. Feuillet has aimed in this story to illustrate the evils of two modern systems of education for women in France—the one which keeps all knowledge from her, and the other, which, throwing open to her the deepest mysteries of science, makes a sceptic and a materialist of her.

Flaubert, Gustave. Salammbô; Englished by French Sheldon. N. Y., Saxon & Co., [American News Co.,] 1886. 20+421 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Flaubert is the acknowledged founder of the naturalistic school of literature, of which Zola and a few other French writers of to-day are followers and imitators. The present novel is considered his masterpiece. The London Times says of it: "This fascinating story of love and war, rich in heroic Carthaginian lore, set in glowing barbaric splendor, surrounded with an atmosphere of dreamy tropical warmth and local color, and with its weird serpent scene and mysterious cults, has long been regarded as an untranslatable work. It is said that this delicate task has been accomplished in such a subtle manner as to preserve all the vigor, natural realism, and idyllic style of the original." The publishers have adopted as their trademark the jewel of Alfred the Great, as being one of the oldest Saxon relics of the kind.

Three American girls and their school life are the subjects the writer works into a sad and bitter tale. The scene changes from a country seat in Pennsylvania to the outskirts of some large city. The mystery of the plot is easily guessed, but the author manages all the harrowing details carefully. The descriptions of the three different homes from which the girls come to boarding-school show decided talent.

Fontaine, F. G. de. De Fontaine's condensed long-hand and rapid writer's companion. N. Y., American News Co., 1886. 148 p. D. cl., $1.25.

An ingenious application of the principles of short hand to the letters and symbols of the ordinary alphabet. The essential features of the system consist first in writing words as they are pronounced, not as they are spelled, and in the omission of all silent and unnecessary letters. Second, in making every letter in the alphabet the representative of a word in common use, which, being analogous in sound to the letter, may be readily joined in phrases. For the use of students attending lectures, journalists, telegraphers, type-writers, lawyers, clergymen, and corresponding clerks. Mr. De Fontaine is the financial editor of the New York Star, and the author of "The cyclopedia of the best thoughts of Charles Dickens," "Birds of a feather," etc.

Foote, Mary Hallock. John Bodewin's testimony. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 4–344 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A very nice sense of obligation deters John Bodewin from giving testimony in the case of the fraudulent changing of the boundaries of the "Eagle Bird" mining claim. Falling in love with the daughter of Mr. Newbold, the owner of the mine, who implores him to give his evidence, he is much divided in mind, and very uncomfortable almost through the story. Scene is laid in the western part of Arkansas, and the natural beauties of the place, the peculiar elements of society drifted there from East and West, the details of mining interests, and civil engineering, make an excellent story. Has just been concluded in the Century.

Presents, in the form of a story, the laborer's side of the controversy between labor and capital: also aims to show the mistakes and errors into which members of organized unions and assemblies of workingmen sometimes fall in the excitement of the conflict now going on. The story is laid in Chicago; the hero's father is murdered and robbed of all his fortune when the young man is a boy; the murderer turns out to be a man of means and a large manufacturer; he represents the odious capitalist, and is made particularly offensive in his dealings with his workmen.

Forde, Gertrude. In the old palazzo: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 62 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 549.) pap., 20 c.

Italy, England, and South Africa are in turns made the background of a very pretty story. The heroine is a little girl left friendless in Rome through the death of her parents; her father was an Englishman of good family and an artist, her mother a Roman. A blind musician acts the part of a father to her till he thinks it time she should be better fitted for her position as an English girl of good family, when he communicates with her English relatives. The girl then spends seven years in England, but returns to Rome when she hears the old "Maestro" is dying. Her artistic life here, her love affairs and her faithfulness to the friends of her childhood are full of interest. The author writes of Rome and Roman life as if from a real experience.

Forrest, R. E. The touchstone of peril: a novel of Anglo-Indian life, with scenes during the mutiny. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 70 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 547.) pap., 20 c.

The author has the advantage of personal familiarity with the materials of which his novel is built up. The characters are natural and life-like. People are possibly a little tired of stories of the Indian mutiny, but when we once get started in this the interest is sustained without any lapses and the author has love-scenes, battle-scenes tournaments enough for another story.

In preparing these the writer has endeavored to make them simple enough for little children to understand, and at the same time sufficiently interesting to hold their attention. By the author of the "Story of the Bible."

Foster, Mrs. I. H., ["Faye Huntington," pseud.] Transformed. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 2-341 p. il. D. cl., $1.25.

Marian Kingsley is introduced as a "sweet girl-graduate;" she has just received her diploma, and is full of the duties imposed upon all, to do whatever good comes to hand. She finds her work in her own village. A miserable family, the "Barneys," that has been given up as utterly and incorrigibly shiftless, are the objects of her missionary labors. By small degrees she not only transforms them all into decent members of society, but the work begun so unostentatiously has its effect and influence in many unexpected directions. Marian's own life is told to the end, a happy marriage being its crowning event.

Time, about eighty years ago. Scene, the southwestern coast of England. A farm known as Zion Farm is supposed to be situated on the ruins of an old city, built by the Phœnicians, and covered centuries ago by shifting sand. The hero, of wild, wandering tastes, neglects his mother and cousin and leaves his affairs in the hands of his uncle, the banker of the place, who ruins him and disappears, having been found out to be a wrecker and a smuggler. The hero is wrecked one night, and while struggling in the water discovers buried treasures under the cliffs near his home. A string of "golden bells" is among them. All ends well. In some parts the story is very exciting.

French, G. H. The butterflies of the Eastern United States; for the use of classes in zoology and private students. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 2–402 p. il. D cl., $2.

The locality covered is all of the U. S. east of the western boundaries of Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana. The work was prepared to meet an urgent want, and embraces a brief description of the several stages of butterflies, methods of capture and preservation, an analytical key, and a complete description of all the species that have been found in the region mentioned. In the last part the preparatory stages are given so far as they are known. These preparatory stages are often essential to a proper understanding of the relation that species bear to one another, besides adding much to the interest of the study of butterflies. In the arrangement of species and nomenclature, Edwards's "New catalogue of the butterflies of North America" has been followed.

The time is the beginning of the 16th century. The French had been victorious in Italy, and the Spaniards had been humbled. The Chevalier de Bayard was born 1476 and was thirty-two years old when we hear of his exploits in battle, his marvellous escapes, his liberality and clemency to foes, which are retold once more in a manner calculated to teach history accurately, and fascinate all lovers of romance, large and small.

Froude, Ja. Anthony. Oceana; or, England and her colonies. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 9+396 p. il. O. cl., $2.50.

The title of Mr. Froude's work is taken from Sir James Harrington's description of a perfect commonwealth, sketched over two centuries ago, and referring then to Great Britain and her dependencies. The idea of an empire of which England's colonies shall form a part is Mr. Froude's leading theme through some twenty essays on the present condition, future outlook, life, climate, resources, etc., of Cape Colony, Australia, and New Zealand. The whole style of the book is delightful. Mr. Froude not only goes deeply into political questions, but offers also a most interesting background of personal adventure, interviews with prominent people, and so on. The concluding chapter, telling of his visit to California and New York, completes his tour of the world.

Fuller, E: Fellow-travellers: a story. Bost Cupples, Upham & Co., 1886. 6+341 p D. cl., $1.50.

"The personages of the narrative are all plain people. The story deals largely with amorous entanglement, matrimonial scheming and domestic harmony or discord, and several of the participants in the interlacing dramas are consistently and almost strongly drawn.... The chief charms of the book lie in its unpretentiousness, its easy style, and in its sympathetic feeling for out-door life, and for New England scenery; there are occasional touches of mild humor, there is virtually no padding, and the whole book, if unexciting, is honorable and high minded."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

Garlanda, F: The philosophy of words: a popular introduction to the science of language. N. Y., A. Lovell & Co., [1886.] 8+287 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The principal merits of this handbook are simplicity and clearness. Mr. Garlanda explains well the outlines of the science of language, as they have been ascertained by the latest scholars, and shows how the study, once fantastic and empirical, has really been raised to the rank of a positive science by modern investigation. His exposition of etymological laws is also excellent, and he illustrates them by interesting and well-chosen examples.

Genone, Hudor, [pseud.] Inquirendo Island. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 5+347 p. D. cl., $1.50.

An evident satire upon church creeds, the author's wit being pointed against those who let "a cold and formal abstraction" take the place of what he calls "a true religion." The book is in the form of a novel. The hero, while yachting off Rockaway, drifts out to sea, and after six days and nights of aimless sailing is cast ashore upon "Inquirendo Island." Here he comes in contact with a peculiar people, primitive in thought and culture, who believe their little island comprises the world, and who listen to his story of another country as the ravings of a lunatic. The Inquirendians have a religious belief of their own—their god being called Mathematics and their inspired book the Arithmetic. It is in the explanations of the workings of this belief and in the setting forth of its various tenets that the writer displays his satiric powers. There is a regular love-story also, and some amusing adventures.

Gerdes, E. Walter Harmsen: a tale of Reformation-times in Holland; from the Dutch, by Rev. Dan. Van Pelt. Phil., Presb. Bd. of Pub., [1886.] 367 p. il. S. cl., $1.25.

The story opens in 1573, five years after the beginning of the Eighty years' war. The history of the "Reformed Dutch Church in the Netherlands" is interwoven in the story of "Walter Harmsen," which introduces the Noordorp Fox, the evangelist John Arentsoon, and other noted characters of the sixteenth century.

Claims to contain 15,000 addresses of dealers in books and stationery. The publisher states that "the ratings given are mostly the estimates of business acquaintances, although in many cases a complete financial statement has been filed [in his office] for reference." Appears to be thoroughly done—nearly five thousand cities being represented. We have noticed a number of inaccuracies in the addresses of parties known to this office, but I presume these will be corrected in subsequent issues.

"The design of this essay is to examine some prevailing misconceptions and misuses of terms used in discussions of monetary topics, and to show the importance of the monetary history of California as tending to clear up such misconceptions, and as furnishing tests by which to measure and judge much of the so-called economic philosophy which readily passes current, at present, in this country. The purpose in view is to aid in simplifying vexed questions relating to money."—Introduction

Gibbs, D. Cecil. If love be love: a forest idyl. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 192 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 74.) pap., 25 c.

The quotation from Tennyson, which serves as a title, also shows the drift of the story. That "Faith and unfaith can ne'er be equal powers" is illustrated in the married life of Vere Danvers, a young English artist, born of a good family, whose wife, Carmen Mendes, is a wonderfully beautiful Spanish girl, whom he met at Boisy-la-Reine, a little French town, where his cousin Psyche has been at school. Carmen's passionate nature and natural coquetry almost makes a tragedy of their lives.

Gibson, W: Hamilton. Happy hunting-grounds: a tribute to the woods and fields; il. by the author. N. Y., Harper, 1887 [1886.] 202 p. Q. cl., $7.50.

The charming sympathy with Nature, and the acute perception of her manifold beauties and wonders displayed by Mr. Gibson in "Pastoral days" and "Highways and byways," are again the prominent features of a new volume. Nearly a hundred illustrations of fields and flowers, birds and trees and skies, adorn and interpret a most delightful text, which is an ingenious combination of facts and poetry. Graceful head and tail pieces, characteristic initials and vignettes, rich paper and a beautiful page, are additional features of this handsome book.

Gilbert, W. S. Original comic operas. N. Y., Harper, [1886.] 73 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 506.) pap., 20 c.

Contains the text of "The sorcerer," "Pinafore," "Pirates of Penzance," "Iolanthe," "Patience," "Princess Ida," "The Mikado," and "Trial by jury."

Giles, J: High-speed ocean steamships: an analysis of the laws of motion, their relation to bodies moving in resisting media, and to various modes of steamship propulsion. N. Y., N. Tibbals & Sons, 1885. 23 p. S. pap., 50 c.

The writer puts forth a new theory which, if practically tried, he thinks would prove a great boon to ocean commerce. The great point upon which he insists is that screw propellers should act obliquely to the ship's line of motion, thereby economizing the power, and enabling the vessel to attain very high speed.

Gill, W. Wyatt. Jottings from the Pacific. N. Y. American Tract Soc., [1886.] 4-304 p. il. D. cl., $1.10.

Describes the Southern Pacific Ocean and the islands lying almost directly under the equator. After mentioning the peculiarities of several islands, the author gives many details of mission work; then a series of sermons by native preachers, and following that many interesting facts about the zoölogy and botany of that portion of the earth. Many anecdotes of native customs and a collection of South Sea Island riddles wind up the volume. There is a good index and there are fifteen illustrations.

Gilliam, C: F., M.D. Love and medicine: a novel. Wash., D. C., Gray & Clarkson, 1886. 390 p. D. cl., 75 c.

A love story, the scene being laid in Southern Ohio. While there is plenty of romance, there is an equal mixture of practical information about the vexations and troubles of a physician's career, while attention is called to a few points in the law, education, and practice as affecting medical men, "in such a way as to interest the general reader as well as physicians and medical students."

Gillig, C: A. New guide to London and important suburban districts, specially compiled for the use of American travellers. [3d English ed.] Chic., Rand, McNally & Co., [1886.] 208 p. maps and il. D. cl., 50 c.

Mr. Gillig has aimed in this little book to produce within a small compass a vade-mecum that shall enable visitors to see all that is interesting and historic in and around about London, within a few weeks and at a small cost.

Gillow, Jos. A literary and biographical history; or, bibliographical dictionary of the English Catholics; from the breach with Rome, in 1534, to the present time. In 5 v. V. 2. N. Y., Catholic Pub. Soc. Co., 1885. 12+557 p. O. cl., net, $4.

A valuable compilation for Catholic readers and students. The present volume extends from D—Grad. Each biography is followed by a careful list of the author's books. Well printed, with large clear type, on fine paper.

Gilman, Arthur. Short stories from the dictionary. Chic., The Interstate Pub. Co., [1886.] 3–129 p. D. cl., 60 c.

The author aims to interest his readers in dictionaries in general and "Webster's Unabridged" in particular. He gives interesting accounts of the history, changes, and uses of words; the meanings of the names of countries, dwellings, and other places; the names for noises, parts of the body, etc., and teaches the great value of understanding the whole meaning of a word and deciding intelligently what words best express the thought, which must first be clear and accurate.

Gilman, Arthur. The story of the Saracens from the earliest times to the fall of Bagdad. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1887 [1886]. 17+493 p. il. D. (The story of the nations ser.) cl., $1.50.

By the same hand as "The story of Rome" in this series. The origin of the word Saracens is unknown to philologists. After having been used in an indefinite manner for all the unknown tribes of the desert, it was given to the followers of Mohammed; and it is used in that sense by the author. Readers are given an account of thrilling interest of the rise and doctrines of this great reformer. There is a valuable bibliography of works relative to Mohammed, embracing two hundred titles. An index of upwards of twenty pages makes this volume available for ready reference.

Gilmore, Ernest. Griffin Alley folk; or, pearls from the slums. Phil., Presb. Bd. of Pub., [1886.] 256 p. il. S. cl., $1.

The "pearls" are two or three inhabitants of the most wretched haunts of great cities, who by their devotion to the temperance cause succeed in elevating their fellow-beings. Rather unnecessarily sad for children.

Gilmore, J. R., ["Edmund Kirke," pseud.] The rear-guard of the revolution. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 8+317 p. por. and map, D. cl., $1.50.

A narrative of the adventures of the pioneers that first crossed the Alleghanies and settled in what is now Tennessee, under the leadership of two remarkable men, James Robertson and John Sevier. Sevier is notably the hero of the narrative. His career was certainly remarkable, as much so as that of Daniel Boone. The title of the book is derived from the fact that a body of hardy volunteers, under the leadership of Sevier, crossed the mountains to uphold the patriotic cause, and by their timely arrival secured the defeat of the British army at King's Mountain. Edmund Kirke will be remembered as the author of a novel "Among the pines," which had a marked success, and some sketches entitled "Down in Tennessee"

Gilmore, Minnie. Pipes from prairie-land, and other places. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886. 2–150 p. D. cl., $1.

A collection of forty or fifty poems in various measures. Miss Gilmore shows originality. Her subjects are mainly drawn from nature, but in those she has printed under the general heading "An original key" she shows knowledge of human nature and skill in the use of dialect. Neatly gotten up in green with script title.

Girl's (A) room; with plans and designs for work upstairs and down and entertainments for herself and friends; by some friends of the girls. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 5–236 p. il. S. cl., $1.

A practical book of instruction for girls, teaching them agreeable ways of making their rooms and homes pretty without much expense, how to darn and mend, how to amuse themselves in a healthful, enjoyable way. The chapters on keeping a journal; on herbariums; on scrap-books; on Sir Walter Scott's idea; on dolls' mittens, etc., are thoroughly adapted to a girl's characteristic tastes. The "friends of the girls" have done their work with enthusiasm.

Gladden, Washington. Applied Christianity: moral aspects of social questions. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 3+320 p. S. cl., $1.25.

Discusses the following questions: Christianity and wealth; Is labor a commodity? The strength and weakness of socialism; Is it peace or war? The wage-workers and the churches; Three dangers; Christianity and social science; Christianity and popular amusements; Christianity and popular education.

Gladstone, W: E. The Irish question. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 57 p. D. pap., 10 c.

Divided into two parts. Pt. 1 is entitled "The history of an idea," and traces the development of the Home Rule idea in Mr. Gladstone's own mind, defends his past course, and defines his present position. In Pt. 2, "Lessons of the election," Mr. Gladstone analyzes the election returns, and concludes that Ireland has only to wait with patience and hope.

Gladstone, W. E., Huxley, T. H., [and others.] The order of creation: the conflict between Genesis and geology: a controversy. N. Y., The Truth-Seeker Co., [1886.] 178 p. D. cl., 75 c.

Contents: Dawn of creation and of worship, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone; The interpreters of Genesis and the interpreters of nature, by Prof. T. H. Huxley; Postscript to solar myths, by Prof. Max Müller; Proem to Genesis: a plea for a fair trial, by Hon. W. E. Gleason, Oscar R. How to handle and educate vicious horses; with hints on the training and health of dogs. N. Y., O. Judd Co., 1886. 3–205 p. pors. and il. D. cl., $1.

The author of this volume has established a world-wide reputation for training and educating horses, having lectured probably in every large city in the United States. The story of his life, which he gives in full, will be read with much interest, as it tells how he obtained what appears an almost miraculous control over unruly horses. In other chapters his methods are set forth in detail, so that any one may be able to put them into practice.

Godet, F. Commentary on the Gospel of John, with an historical and critical introduction, V. 1; from the 3d French ed., with preface, introductory suggestions, and additional notes by Timothy Dwight, D.D. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 9+559 p. O. cl., $3.

"The commentary on the Gospel of John, which is now presented in its third edition to American readers, has been well known to New Testament scholars for twenty years. It was originally published in 1864–65, and immediately commanded attention. Ten or eleven years later an enlarged and greatly improved edition was issued, which was soon afterward translated into English. The first volume of the 3d edition, from which this is translated, was given to the public in 1881; the second and third volumes have appeared during the present year (1886). Unlike most of the German commentators of recent days, Godet has, with each new edition, not simply revised what he had written at an earlier date, but, in large measure, prepared a new work. This is very strikingly true of the introductory volume of this latest edition of the original. . . . Among the commentaries on this Gospel this may be ranked as one of the best—a book which every student and minister may well examine both for the light which it throws upon the most deeply interesting portion of the New Testament and for its suggestiveness to Christian thought."—Prof Dwight's Preface.

Gogol, Nikolai Vasilievitch. St. John's eve and other stories; from the Russian by Isabel F. Hapgood. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 383 p. D. cl., $1.25.

There are six stories in this volume, which takes its title from the first. They are a selection from "Evenings at the farm" and "St. Petersburg stories." "Old-fashioned farmers" will probably appeal most to English readers. Gogol is realistic in method like his followers, but he is poetic in style. The translation is as well done as "Taras Bulba," and the stories are full of Cossack life, love, and fighting pictured in vivid and sometimes barbaric colors.

Gogol, Nikolai Vasilievitch. Taras Bulba; tr from the Russian by Isabel F. Hapgood. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 3-295 p. D. cl., $1.

"Gogol is one of the greatest of all Russian writers, and eminent as a delineator of popular life. So accurate are his ethnographic sketches that they led to his selection for a professorship of mediæval history in the university of Petersburg. . . . 'Taras Bulba' describes the life of Little Russia in the sixteenth century, Taras himself being an old-fashioned colonel who hated Poland, abhorred the Turk, and defended the religion of his fathers. The story begins with the return of his sons from the seminary, and a free fight, in which Taras is beaten by his eldest. . . . 'Taras Bulba' will delight plain readers, who like adventures, quite as much as it will astonish and please the best informed judges of Russian history, and the Russian character. It is powerful and true, and for American readers it has the extraordinary charm of novelty."—Boston Beacon.

Gogol, Nikolai Vasilievitch. Tchitchikoff's jour-neys; or, dead souls; tr. from the Russian by Isabel F. Hapgood. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 2 v., 3+364; 3+285 p. D. cl., $2.50.

"It pictures life in the Russian provinces about forty years ago—that is to say, long before the emancipation of the serfs, and even before the Crimean war. Gogol's theme was not so much of a plea for the serfs, nor a tirade against the middle class, official and private, of provincial Russia, as a picture of Russian life. In fact, a free reproduction of 'Dead souls' was published in London in 1854, with this title, 'Home-life in Russia.' . . . The characters are what we in America should call the local aristocracy. In Russia, where they have many 'excellencies' and 'eminences,' and some 'majesties,' the characters might be described as the middle-class—landowners, Government officers, and Tchitchikoff. Tchitchikoff, a man of mean birth, is a modern schemer. . . . Tchitchikoff's stock in trade, the idea on which he travels and succeeds, is the purchase of 'dead souls'—that is, of serfs nominally enumerated in the census or official reports, but really not living. Of course, this idea of buying dead souls, and making money in the bargain, is bitter sarcasm, Gogol wishing to expose the hollow pretexts on which certain shrewd managers obtain money first, and respectability afterwards. The matter, in fact, is treated as a mere incident or by-play, the kernel of the story lying in the delineation of the central personages."—Boston Beacon.

This beautiful book has become so familiar to readers its general features, in its long course through Harper's Magazine, that a description is almost unnecessary. Everything has been done for it in its present form to make it one of the exceptional art books of the season. Paper, print, binding, and even the boxes, are in exquisite taste and of the best. The illustrations run through the text, and cover full pages, all presenting in a graphic way the characters and scenes of this favorite comedy.

This beautiful book forms a companion volume to V. A. Poirson's handsome edition of "Gulliver's travels," issued last season. The illustrations consist of small pictures at the heads of chapters, decorative opening initials and vignettes in the text. They all charmingly illustrate the story, and are finely colored. The binding, in gray cloth, has an appropriate design in colors. The paper is rich and heavy, with wide margins, rough edges, top gilt.

Gosse, Edmund. Raleigh. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 5+248 p. S. (English worthies.) cl., 75 c.

Mr. Gosse has carefully sought his materials for this short, spirited biography of Queen Elizabeth's popular favorite. The treatment shows the weak as well as strong sides of Raleigh's character, and faithfully describes him as a domestic man, a courtier, a navigator, a man of letters, and a devoted patriot. The account of the outrageous treatment he received at the hands of King James, his long imprisonment, and his unwarranted execution is dramatic and although the events in the life of this royal favorite, who had more to do with America than any public man of the time, have been so often told, Mr. Gosse has succeeded in making them read like a new romance. It is one of the most interesting volumes of the series.

These meditations are designed to be the completion of the author's "Thoughts upon the liturgical gospels for the Sundays," which was put forth some three years ago. In this work three meditations are provided for such saints' days as have vigils, two for those which have none. To the meditations is prefixed some account of the origin of saints' days, and their evens or vigils; of the pruning of the calendar of the English church by the reformers; and of the reintroduction of the black-letter festivals, with separate notices of the four which were reintroduced in the prayer-book of 1552.

Gower, Lord Ronald. Last days of Marie Antoinette: an historical sketch. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 7+154 p. sq. D. cl., subs. $4. (limited to 483 copies.)

The author had intended writing a voluminous life of the unfortunate French queen, but finally chose the period immediatelly preceding her execution, because, as he says, "the queen's life becomes chiefly interesting as it approaches its end and is chiefly remarkable by showing how a woman whose early years were trifled thoughtlessly away, and who in late life—most unfortunately for her family, herself, and her adopted family—mixed herself in politics . . . was raised through suffering to an heroic level." The author's style is sympathetic and charming.

The heroine is the only child of a millionaire, whose mother has died in giving her birth. Her father brings her up in seclusion, and ignorant of the great wealth she will inherit, until she is of an age to be launched into society. Then he tells her of her expectations, and places in her hands $100,000, which she is to do with as she fancies; he gives her a great deal of good advice, but rather desires she may learn to manage her own affairs, and thus become self-reliant. Her career is full of adventure. She is pursued by many mercenary admirers, and only succeeds at last in being loved unselfishly through a clever but somewhat improbable little plan of her own conceiving. The story is quite amusing and hits off quite graphically some of the literary "cranks" of Bohemia.

Green, Anna Katharine. The mill mystery. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 389 p. S. (Knickerbocker novels.) cl., $1; pap., 50 c.

The scene is laid in some country town—on the outskirts of Boston, probably. The "mystery" is not kept as darkly veiled to the close as in the author's former works, but she shows her old skill in the working up of minute details of evidence. None of the characters inspire warm personal sympathy, but two or three show originality of conception. The love episode of the story ends happily on the very spot where occurred the "mill mystery."

Green, Anna Katherine. Risifi's daughter: a drama. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1887 [1886.] 2+109 p. D. cl., $1.

Scene, ancient Florence. A five-act drama in blank verse. Sixteen characters. A Florentine prince of ruined fortunes consents that his heir shall marry the rich merchant Risifi's daughter. By chance the young man, after, much against his will, learning to love Genevra, finds out his brother loves her. He generously offers to give her to his brother. The merchant insists she shall marry the heir or some scheming friend of his. Giovanni commits suicide to make his brother heir and give the lovers to each other. A new field for this well-known author of modern detective stories.

The purpose of the author is felt when Diana Pennington reads the verse in the Bible which says, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols;" the story demonstrates this text thoroughly, giving us glimpses of the Penningtons and their individual idols, which were subdued by the influence of Diana, extending beyond her own household into the home of the St. Barbes, and helping Ursula to win the victory, which was Di Pennington's reward.

A miniature book, prettily gotten up, containing on each page an original aphorism, often very wittily and concisely expressed.

Greene, Belle C. Adventures of an old maid. N. Y., J. S. Ogilvie, [1886.] 3-183 p. D. cl., 50 c.

A collection of humorous sketches which hit very cleverly some of the follies as well as the new inventions and modern improvements of the day; the best papers are those in which Aunt Ruth paraphrases "The mind cure," "Her experience in palmistry," "Writing for the newspapers," "Mutual life insurance," "High art and æsthetics."

With a good deal of wit and literary ability, Mr. Gregg gives an outline history of Ireland from the earliest traditions of Milesian kings down to the present crisis in the Parnellite movement. A feeling of not unnatural bitterness colors the author's narrative, which is certainly a dark record of English wrongs against Ireland.

Gregory, J: M. The seven laws of teaching. Bost., Congregational S. S. and Pub. Soc., [1886.] 8+144 p. S. cl., 75 c.

Author is ex-president of the State University of Illinois. A scientific treatise on teaching, with special reference to the teaching of Sunday-schools. The laws briefly summed up are: 1. Known your subject; 2. Gain interest of learner; 3. Have a common language as means of communication; 4. Teach the unknown from the known; 5. Arouse pupil's mind to form its own conceptions; 6. Require pupil to express thought gained in his own language; 7. Review, review, review! A good seven-page index makes this a practical manual full of useful thoughts.

Gréville, Henry, [pseud. for Mme. Alice Durand.] Cleopatra. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 3–299 p. por. cl., $1.25.

St. Petersburg is the scene chosen by Henry Gréville for her latest novel. The heroine, Cleopatra Bakhtof, is endowed with almost supernatural beauty, excessive pride, keen intellect, and, above all, great virtue; being thwarted in her pet scheme, she suddenly marries a Russian general, and seems contented with her lot, as the Countess Néoutof, until her meeting with Ulric Alsen brings about the strange results upon which the plot is hinged. The character delineations are excellent, and create an interest apart from that felt in the story.

Gréville, H:, [pseud. for Mme. Alice Marie Durand.] Count Xavier; tr. by Mrs. Mary C. Robbins. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 5–278 p. S. cl., $1.

"Count Xavier is a young man of rank who is born poor, but a rich old uncle leaves him a large estate and fortune. He fancies himself a little in love with a peasant girl, but finally is really in love with another. Poor Marva, however—the passing fancy—is genuinely in love with Xavier all the time. Mme. Gréville has chosen a very sentimental and pleasantly improbable solution of the problem. Her agreeable humor constantly enlivens what is, on the whole, an agreeable tale. A few words about the translation. The publishers have at last found a competent and successful translator in Mrs. Robbins, whose fluent version of 'Count Xavier' plainly declares itself the work of a cultivated woman."—Boston Post.

Griffin, Solomon Bulkley. Mexico of to-day. N. Y., Harper 1886. 5+267 p. map and il. D. cl., $1.50.

Contents first appeared in a series of letters to The Springfield Republican. The author's aim has been to exhibit the country, climate, people, politics, life, and national outlook of Mexico exactly as they impress an unprejudiced observer from the U. S. The object is to give a more intelligent conception of our southern sister republic and to describe the charms of scenery and the phases of a romantic and ancient civilization. The author dwells upon the patience that will long be needed in judging the statesmanship of Mexico.

Griffiths, Arthur. Fast and loose: a novel. Chic., Rand, McNally & Co., [1886.] 4+233 p. D. pap., 35 c.

Opens with a mysterious bank robbery. The cashier is suspected and discharged. The second cashier takes his place, and works himself into the good graces of the firm. The story is most complicated. The head of the bank, his partner's wife, her son by a former marriage, and her French lady's maid are the actors in the slightly improbable scenes that finally lead to the convicting of the real robber. The motives of the chief actors make the story unsuitable for young devourers of detective stories.

Grimm, C. L. W. A Greek-English lexicon of the New Testament; being Grimm's Wilke's Clavis novi testamenti; tr. rev. and enl. by Jos. H: Thayer, D.D. N. Y., Harper, 1887 [1886.] 17+723 p. Q. cl., $5; hf. roan, $6; full shp., $6.50.

This lexicon is founded on the second edition of the lexicon of Professor Grimm, of Jena, and it embodies all the distinctive merits of Grimm's work. Besides translating the work, Professor Thayer has striven in many ways to improve it. He has sought "to verify all references; to note more generally the extra-biblical usage of words; to give the derivation of words in cases where it is agreed upon by the best etymologists; to render complete the enumeration of verbal forms; to append to every verb a list of those of its compounds which occur in the Greek Testaments; to supply the New Testament passages accidentally omitted in words marked at the end with an asterisk; to note more fully the variations in the Greek text of current editions; to introduce brief discussions of New Testament synonymes; to give the more noteworthy renderings, not only of the Authorized Version, but also of the Revised New Testament; to multiply cross-references, references to grammatical works, both sacred and classical, and to the best English and American commentaries, etc." An appendix classifies the vocabulary of the New Testament, and points out the words peculiar to each Book, with a fulness and accuracy hitherto unattained. The whole ends with a catalogue of peculiar and singular verbal forms.

Grimm, Herman. The destruction of Rome: a letter. Bost., Cupples, Upham & Co., 1886. 44 p. S. pap., 20 c.

A protest against the demolition of the historic landmarks in Rome, called out by the cutting up of the Villas Albani and Aldobrandini into building lots, and erecting on their sites towering tenement houses. The author has taken for his motto the lines from Childe Harold:

"While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand;
When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall."

Griselda: a novel; by the author of "The garden of Eden." N. Y., Harper, 1886. 52 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 515.) pap., 20c.

Griselda is the daughter of the Rev. John Black, the vicar of Crowsfoot. She is born under exceptional circumstances, and has an exceptional life. There is a mystery in her father's life which colors the whole story, but which is made plain at last. Griselda is loved by one far above her in station, her courtship and marriage making a very pretty tale.

Griswold, Hattie Tyng. Home life of great authors. Chic., A. C. McClurg & Co., 1887 [1886.] 3-385 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A collection of upwards of thirty descriptive sketches, having for their subjects Byron, Burns, the Brownings, Bryant, Bulwer, Charlotte Brontë, Dickens, De Staël, De Quincey, George Eliot, Emerson, Margaret Fuller, Irving, Goethe, Hawthorne, Hood, Hugo, Kingsley, Lowell, Lamb, Longfellow, Macaulay, Milton, Kit North, Poe, Ruskin, Shelley, George Sand, Thackeray Tennyson, Wordsworth, and Whittier. The sketches are not critical, but rather descriptive of their subjects' common every-day life, and especially their domestic experiences—not in the style of vulgar gossip, but presenting such facts as are matters of legitimate interest and essential to a correct understanding of the characters. The sketches are written in an easy, entertaining, and refined style, suiting the volume to the needs of readers of all ages.

An addition to the author's historical stories, through which young people have learned much English history pleasantly. Mrs. Studley is supposed to be lady-in-waiting to Lady Corbet, who has figured in former volumes. The book is written in form of diary and treats of the years 1684 to 1690, giving all the important incidents of the latter part of the reign of Charles II. and the beginning of that of James I. The style is quaint and attractive.

Guthrie, F. Anstey. A fallen idol. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., [1886.] 4+334 p. D. cl., 75 c.; pap., 25 c.

Begins with a prologue supposed to be enacted in India in the eighteenth century. There is a temple scene in which many idols are mutilated and destroyed, and one, a comparatively new-comer among the gods, keeps its place and power. Then comes the story laid in London of the present day. The author of "Vice versâ" in this story uses all his old wit and humor in showing the workings of theosophy. Axel Nebelsen is the devotee of the new faith, and some of his conversations, rendered in a mixture of Norwegian and German pronunciation of the peculiar phraseology of theosophy, are very amusing. A very ugly idol given by a young girl to her lover brings him continued ill-luck until it finally is "a fallen idol," and the world grows bright for all.

Only the salient points in Spanish history are recorded. The authors warn the reader from the beginning that details of court intrigues and court scandals are not entered into. "But," they say, "we have thought that the reader of to-day ought to know what are the successive steps by which the Iberia, which was almost a fabled country to the Romans of the time of the Consuls, has become the Spain of to-day, with the proud record of Spain in literature, in adventure, in discovery, in statesmanship, and in war." Part of the plan of the book is to refer, from chapter to chapter, to such illustrations from the writings of various authors of different countries as might interest young readers, and tempt them to follow not only the history of Spain in its chronological order, but the series of writings which in romance, in poetry, and in other literature we owe to her suggestions.

Hale, Lucretia P. The Peterkin papers. [New enl. ed.] Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 6-219 p. il. sq. O. cl., $1.50.

The continued popularity of these amusing papers has led to a new holiday edition, uniform with "Davy and the goblin." It is handsomely printed in delightfully readable type, well leaded out. Several of the capital full-page illustrations made by Attwood for the earlier editions have been redrawn for this work; and there are also two hundred entirely new pictures, drawn by F. Myrick, and scattered through the text. It is enriched by a hitherto unpublished paper, "The Peterkins at the farm," one of the most mirthful of the entire series. The cover is adorned with vivid representations of Mrs. Peterkin and her coffee, the struggle of the Peterkin family with their summer-resort trunk, and the memorable rubber boots.

Hale, Lucretia P. The last of the Peterkins, and others of their kin. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 263 p. il. S. cl., $1.25.

In this concluding chronicle of the famous Peterkin family, "Elizabeth Eliza writes a paper," and confides to her readers the secrets of her commonplace book. "The Peterkins practice travelling," and we behold "Mrs. Peterkin in Egypt," and witness her faint on the great Pyramid. Their final fate is told in "The last of the Peterkins." Six short stories, "Lucilla's diary," "Jedediah's Noah's ark," "Carrie's three wishes," "Where can those boys be?" "A place for Oscar," and "The first needle," complete the volume.

Hale, W: Shore life in song. Biddeford, Me., printed at the Biddeford Journal Office, 1886. 8+246 p. S. cl., $1.25.

After admitting all the evils of war, the author shows that it is in many cases right and inevitable. He further argues that war is an art, founded on scientific principles, but that "this art and these principles have been obscured and hindered in this nation by mistaken and misapplied conceptions of the teachings of Christianity." Reviewing the many possibilities that may in the future render desirable a well-trained militia, he urges that preparation be made in this direction before it is again forced upon us.

Hall, Eugene. The master of L'Etrange. Phil., T. B. Peterson & Bros., [1886.] 19-346 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A story of American life in the South; deals with love and mystery and the supernatural.

Although the editors modestly assert that this "is not put forth as a finished bibliography," it is really unusually comprehensive and the best thing of the kind so far published. The grouping of topics is quite extended, embracing sixty sections, which contain not only English works, but works in French, German, Italian, and other foreign languages. In the majority of cases publisher and date of pub. are given. The annotations are very valuable and the index an excellent key.

Hallock, C: Our new Alaska, or, the Seward purchase vindicated; il. from sketches by T. J. Richardson. N. Y., Forest & Stream Pub. Co., 1886. 3+209 p. il. D cl., $1.50.

The special object of this book is to point out the visible resources of the far-off territory purchased for the United States by Secretary Seward. Attention is directed to the extraordinary physical phenomena whose marvellous combination makes Alaska the most attractive region in the world for sojourners and tourists. Mr. Hallock's facts are contributed from personal information unaided by reports and reference-books, but his work has been read and approved by the specialists of the Smithsonian Institution. The style of the author of the "Fishing Tourist" and of "Camp Life in Florida" is always vivid.

Hall, C: H. Manual training the solution of social and industrial problems. N.Y. Harper, 1886. 19+403 p. il. D cl., $1.50.

In preparing a paper in 1879 to be read before the Chicago Philosophical Society, on the subject of "The inventive genius; or, an epitome of human progress," the author found that in tracing the course of invention and discovery, he was moving "in the line of the progress of civilization," and he finally arrived at the proposition that "it is through the arts alone that all branches of learning find expression, and touch human life." The present work is the outcome of his study of the subject, and may be summarized briefly as consisting of four divisions: 1, A detailed description of the various laboratory class processes from the first lesson to the last, in the course of three years; 2, an exhaustive argument in support of the proposition that tool practice is highly promotive of intellectual growth, and in a still greater degree of the upbuilding of character; and, 3 and 4, a sketch of the historical period, and a brief sketch of the history of manual training as an educational force.

Hamerton, Mrs. Eugénie. Golden mediocrity: a novel. Bost., Robert Bros., 1886. 273 p. S. cl., $1; pap., 50 c.

Mrs. Hamerton is the "Eugenie" to whom her husband, Philip Gilbert Hamerton, dedicated his book, "The intellectual life." She tells a simple tale of French middle class life, with the same realism that is characteristic of Mr. Hamerton's novels of France—personal observation and experience being the valuable basis from which each have worked. Jean Molé having finished his collegiate course in England, comes home for a visit, bringing with him some English friends, who hire a small house for the summer near his parents' home in Champigny. Intimacies ensue among all the young people, out of which two love affairs spring. The writer's chief motive seems to be to compare English and French methods of thought and living, social habits and customs, etc

"The philosopher looks into his mind, the poet asks questions of his soul. . . . Hence philosophy is illusive while the poet's song, like a honey-laden bee bears on its wings the fine essence of truth and beauty. In youth we love the poets and then the ignis fatuus of philosophy leads us through the quagmires of speculation, until, perishing of cold and hunger, we return to our first love, and again listen to the voice of God, speaking to the soul in the songs of birds and poets."—Prelude.

A number of Sunday-school boys and girls desiring to raise a sum of money for a charitable object and wishing to avoid the old-fashioned means of fairs and festivals, evolve two very excellent plans, which are successfully carried out. The girls bake cake, bread, biscuit, etc., and have a room where they sell it certain days, the boys open a gymnasium and debating club Both the schemes are conducted on business principles and yield all the money they need

Hamilton, Kate W. Wood, hay and stubble. Phil., Presbyterian Bd. of Pub., 1886. 336 p D. cl., $1.25.

The story illustrates the text, "If any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble, the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is." A family consisting of two brothers and three sisters are the actors. The young wife of the elder brother is the good genius of the tale. Especially is the lesson taught of the wretchedness of a life of shams, of the attempt to keep up appearances, whether in the household or in the religious life. The pure gold of a sincere, earnest, honest Christian character stands out in relief against the background of seeming, of pretence, and of half-heartedness in service.

Hamlin, Mrs. Myra Sawyer. A politician's daughter N Y., Appleton, 1886. 2-231 p. D. hf. cl., 75 c.

A heroine of an unusual type and a bright, cultivated style lift this novel out of the ordinary run of novels. Some party papers are accusing the author of typifying Blaine in the leading character, an unsuccessful candidate for the Presidency, whose public career is ruined by his compromising himself while in Congress with a railroad enterprise in which he owns stock. The scene is laid in a New England town first, and afterward in New York. The story is among cultured people, and is unusually rich in clever talk showing knowledge of all the political issues of the day. Miss Harcourt has fed on politics from her birth, and lived among her father's friends, hence is an unusually strong type of womanhood, charming nevertheless, and full of tact and grace. Mrs. Hamlin is a niece by marriage of the Hon Hannibal Hamlin—she was formerly of Bangor, but is now a resident of New York.

Hanus, Paul H. An elementary treatise on the theory of determinants: a text-book for colleges. Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 8+217 p. O. cl., $1.90.

In this, the only American book on the subject, the theory is given with sufficient fulness for all students who desire to use determinants as instruments of research, and to enable them to read the works of modern mathematicians, most of whom employ the determinant notation. Prof. Hanus' work differs from that of Muir, especially in the first chapter, which shows how and why determinants came to exist and their importance in having a chapter on applications, and in presenting the special forms in connection with the cases that give rise to them.

Hapgood, Isabel Florence, comp. The epic songs of Russia; with an introductory note by Francis J. Child. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 12+358 p. O. cl., $2.50.

"From the collections of folk-lore made by competent Russian authorities, Isabel Florence Hapgood has selected and translated a volume of 'The epic songs of Russia.' These songs have been handed down from generation to generation for a thousand years, wholly by oral tradition, and to-day in northern Russia are sung by many peasants who believe implicitly in the heroes whose deeds they relate. It is only within the present century that the learned Russians began to take any notice of these interesting legends. Within the past twenty-five years several valuable collections have been made by men who travelled among the peasants and jotted down the words as they were sung. The minstrels do not make the singing of these songs a business, but a domestic diversion, and nearly all of them are well-to-do. There are many versions of the same legend, varying in details, but always preserving the main story intact. The author has in this volume given a prose translation of fifty songs, endeavoring to preserve the style of the original. Professor F. J. Child, in an introductory note, points out that no volume of the same kind and compass has been published in any language of western Europe."—N. Y. Evening Post.

Harding, B. F. Greek inflection; or, object-lessons in Greek philology. Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 7+44 p. D. cl., 55 c.

The object of this work is to economize time for the teacher by furnishing a large number of words for ready use, as paradigms, in the class-room, and at the same time to suggest a systematic and scientific treatment of the noun and verb. Designed for parallel use with the grammar, but has nothing to do with syntax.

Hardy, Arthur Sherburne. The wind of destiny. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 307 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The author of "But yet a woman" showed originality of thought and diction. In the succession of scenes and grouping of characters which the "Wind of destiny" shifts almost too quickly before our hearts and minds he shows the same originality and even greater skill in making few words say much and seem to mean even more. Schonberg, a philosopher, and Harold, an artist, meet as students in a French college. Harold marries. His wife's family cast her off. After some years Harold and his wife die, leaving two little girls to the care of Schonberg. He takes them home, and he dies at the age of sixty. The influence for good and ill exerted by human beings upon one another in the most fleeting meetings, the irresistible power of love and the irresistible force of circumstance, are the author's key-notes. The book is suggestive to a rare degree, but very sad.

Hardy, T: The Mayor of Casterbridge: a novel. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. 2+356 p. S. (Leisure hour ser., no. 191.) cl., $1; pap., 25 c.

Upon the rather improbable incident of a man selling his wife for five guineas this story is based. The scene is laid among primitive people in a remote part of England, the wife being represented as an almost ideal specimen of ignorance and innocence. She believes that her husband has a legal right to sell her, and meekly takes her child in her arms and follows her new proprietor. The husband is a hay-trusser and penniless, and under the influence of liquor when he gets rid of his wife. On coming to his senses he is overpowered with remorse, and makes a vow that for the next twenty years he will not touch intoxicating liquors. When we meet them again he has become rich and Mayor of Casterbridge. He has sought in vain for his wife, who suddenly appears on the scene in the character of a widow, with one child, a grown-up young lady. Various complications follow, which are added to by falsehoods on both sides. Courtship and marriage play also a large part in the narrative. As may be expected from Hardy, the character sketching and descriptions of scenery are full of power.

A young lawyer is the hero. His first case is the tracking of Mrs. Peixada, a young woman of twenty-three accused of shooting her husband and disappearing. The story is almost all acted in Beekman Place in New York City. The plot is as peculiar as that of "As it was written;" the author shows medical, legal, and musical knowledge in almost equal proportion, and writes excellent English. The divestment is a thorough surprise.

A detective story. On a January afternoon Harry Hastings, clerk in a jewelry establishment, received a note saying, "You are hereby notified that on next Thursday afternoon you shall disappear from among men; you shall vanish utterly, and be known no more." He puts himself in the hands of a brilliant detective, who shadows him on the day mentioned as far as Broadway and Grand Street, N. Y. City, where a block in the street makes him lose sight of him, and when the wagons move on his client is gone. His efforts to recover the track, and the explanations of the methods and motives of the villains concerned, make up the story.

Harte, Bret. Snow-bound at Eagle's. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 213 p. T. cl., $1.

Two gentlemanly, fascinating stage-coach robbers, with a keen sense of humor, are the heroes; after waylaying and robbing the Sacramento coach, one is wounded in escaping from their pursuers, and by a stratagem they both gain admittance at Eagle's Court, the residence of John Hale, one of the passengers of the coach. "Eagle's" is in a sheltered nook, upon one of the highest points of the Sierras, and a heavy snow-storm which sets in not only keeps John Hale out of his home for a week, but makes unwilling visitors of the two highwaymen. The comedy which ensues is more amusing than edifying; the charms of the robbers impressing not only John Hale's sister-in-law, a prim Boston girl, but also making havoc with his wife's heart. Hale has adventures likewise, as a set-off to the doings at Eagle's.

The book in its entirety is a fine specimen of chromo-lithography, every page being different, and exquisitely graceful in the grouping of the flowers. The coloring is very fine.

Essays and papers: "A preliminary confession" is the story of Mr. Hawthorne's literary life which he contributed to Lippincott's Magazine, considerably enlarged, and giving fuller details of his methods of work. The other papers are: Novels and agnosticism; Americanism in fiction; Literature for children; The moral aim in fiction; The maker of many books; Mr. Mallock's missing science; Theodore Winthrop's writings; Emerson as an American; Modern magic; American wild animals in art.

Hawthorne, Julian. John Parmelee's curse. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 7-270 p. S. cl., $1.

"John Parmelee's curse" is the opium habit, contracted in the hope of finding consolation for his breaking heart, after witnessing his wife's downfall, and the utter wreck of her womanhood, from the same vice. The picture of Parmelee's home is a sad and realistic one, and the figure of his little daughter Sophie most pathetic. The story turns on an attempt that is made to rob the bank of which Parmelee is cashier. He has been warned that the robbery is planned, and makes an honest endeavor to save the funds in his charge. His ungovernable love for opium gets him into a very suspicious tangle of circumstances, which are only straitened out after a number of strange adventures which bring him to New York City and into a den of thieves and a Chinese opium joint.

Hay, Mary Cecil. A wicked girl. a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 175 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 91.) pap., 25 c.
The last novel from Miss Hay's pen. A character study of a young girl, as to whom the reader is left in doubt whether she is "wicked" or insane. She succeeds in committing one murder and plans another, in which the victim is her sister. In the latter case she loses her own life, fortunately for herself and all belonging to her. The story takes place in an out-of-the-way English town, and is full of interest in spite of its unhealthy subject. A pretty love experience and a saucy Irish heroine are the lighter elements of the story.

Haynes, Emory J. Dollars and duty. N. Y., Ward & Drummond, 1887 [1886.] 3–458 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The hero is the son of a minister ; he grows up the pride and happiness of his mother and father's heart. Arriving at manhood he falls in love with the daughter of a wealthy merchant and is accepted as her affianced husband and offered a fine position in her father's business ; just when it seems his whole life is settled, he thinks duty calls him to the ministry ; it is this struggle between his interests and his duty that makes the story.

Hays, Mrs. Helen. Aspirations. N. Y., T: Whittaker, 1886. 331 p. D. cl., $1.25.
The story of a little fisher-lad who turns out to be the heir to a great name and fortune. He passes his youth in an humble cottage in a fishing village of Cape Cod with his grandparents. There seems to be a mystery about his mother's family, though it is know she was an Italian. Lillo, as he is called, shows at an early age great artistic talent, which is afterward developed in Italy, to which country he makes his way, after the death of his relatives. A large portion of the story takes place in Florence, where Lillo obtains much success as a painter, and discovers he is a count, and the heir of the great house of Romanos. The book is a novel, dealing toward the end with love and marriage. The author has hitherto been known as a writer of children's stories.

Hays, H:, (pseud.) The story of Margaret Kent. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 444 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The story is that of a woman, beautiful and accomplished, left by an easy-going husband, absent in South America, to earn her own living and that of their child by literary work in New York. She is a "social success," without money to back it up, backbitten by inhuman women, loyally admired by men ; the contrasts of her life are drawn with great dramatic power: social and literary life in New York is acutely studied, and the book is one of the most remarkable of recent novels

This book is a little typographical gem. The author has read and collected far and wide all that can be found about old cook-books and old customs and ways of cooking; also anecdotes about the table—manners and table-conversations of many ancient celebrities. There are endless receipts for cooking many delicacies quite unknown to modern gourmets. The book covers the subject of ancient cookery in France, Germany, and England especially, but other lands are cursorily mentioned.

Circumstances have delayed the issue of this part beyond the expectations of author or publishers. They believe though it will be found better for the deliberateness of its preparation. Like part first, it is essentially practical. It aims to secure a knowledge of our language and ability to use it, rather than glib parsing or skill in drawing diagrams.

Hector, Mrs. Annie F., ["Mrs. Alexander," pseud.] Beaton's bargain: a novel. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. 4+253 p. S. (Leisure hour ser., no. 187.) cl., $1; pap., 25 c.

The opening is full of promise. It is in a private box at a London theatre during the last act of "Much ado about nothing," in which Irving and Miss Terry have been enchanting a brilliant audience. We are at once introduced to the principal characters, and made to understand that fashionable, dashing Leslie Beaton is figuratively on his "last legs" regarding money, and must marry an heiress, without much loss of time, if he wishes to continue in society. A heartless scheme growing out of a newspaper advertisement is concocted by the party, and Leslie is soon brought face to face with his heiress. She is a pretty, yielding little girl, innocent of the plot of which she is almost the victim. The story takes place almost entirely in fashionable London life, its vices and frivolities being well shown up.

Henderson, I: The prelate: a novel. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 5-350 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The "Prelate" is Altieri, supposed to be one of the most gifted priests of the Roman Church, who leaves it and joins the "old Catholics," of which body he maintains the present Roman Church is a corrupted part. The heroine is an American girl, who becomes interested in Altieri, and is made use of to warn him of danger. She puts herself into a false position, is deserted by all her women friends, and suffers many trials. Finally she is engaged to marry Altieri, who assures her marriage is not forbidden by the true Catholic Church. The plot surprises at the close. Isaac Henderson was for years on the Evening Post. The cover design is by Elihu Vedder, an intimate friend of the author's.

Henry, Mrs. M. H., ["Howe Benning," pseud.] Hope Reed's upper windows. N. Y., American Tract Soc., [1886.] 304 p. il. D. cl., $1.25.

Scene laid in a New England village. A young girl returns home from boarding school and has great plans for future work. Finds her father on the verge of failure, her mother worn out, and sets to work to help at home instead of waiting for some great mission. The "upper windows" are the little moments of rest she takes to learn some good thought to help her through the day.

Hinton, Ja., M.D. The mystery of pain: with an introduction by Ja. R. Nichols, M.D. Bost., Cupples, Upham & Co., 1886. 8+121 p. D. cl., $1.
This little work was published in England twenty years ago. The author was for a number of years a practising physician in London, and attained much celebrity in his profession. His mind tended strongly, however, toward metaphysics, and he abandoned the practice of medicine early in middle life, and devoted himself to writing books. "The mystery of pain" has comforted many a troubled soul, and awakened the emotion of love in distressed and doubting hearts. The cure for pain which he brings to view rests entirely on a religious basis.

Hitchcock, J. R W. Etching in America; with lists of American etchers and notable collections of prints. N. Y., White, Stokes & Allen, 1886. 7+96 p. D. cl., $1.25.
This little book is not intended to be exhaustive. If it be found suggestive, the author's chief purpose will be satisfied. As a history, "it records the subserviency of etching in the hands of our early engraver etchers, and the various influences leading to the late emancipation of etching as an art." Some account is given of the growth of American print collecting, and of the present private and public collections.

Hoare, Rev. E. N. Seeking a country; or, the home of the pilgrims. N. Y., T: Nelson & Sons, 1886. 3-235 p. il. D. cl., $1.
Opens in England 1620; tells the story of the sailing of the Mayflower from Southampton, and the landing of the pilgrims at Cape Cod, their first home, and the various incidents connected with it. While strictly authentic in its historical details, there is a vein of fiction running through the book which makes it more acceptable to young readers.

Hobart Pasha, Admiral. Sketches from my life. N. Y., Appleton, 1887 [1886.] 6+282 p. por. S. pap., 50 c.
This is the record of an active life full of stirring adventure. It was written in the last days of the old admiral's life. The narrative begins with his rough experiences as a naval cadet. Among its most interesting features are his voyages in search of slavers, blockade-running on our coast during the civil war, and his career in the Turkish Navy during the war with Russia.

Hocking. Silas K. Caleb Carthew: a life story. N. Y., Ward & Drummond, 1886. 10+385 p. 1 por. D. cl., $1.50.

Th scene is laid in Grunhill, Lancashire; a seemingly unimportant incident opens the story and really proves the turning-point in Caleb Carthew's life, as it caused him to be expelled from school, brought about the Damon and Pythias friendship between himself and Frank Preston, and finally was the cause of David's becoming a carpenter's apprentice. From this time Frank tells the story which comprises the eventful things in Caleb's career, some interesting things in his own history, their joint romances, and the sad love affair of Kate Carthew.

Hodgetts, I. F. Ivan Dobroff. a Russian story. Phil., G: H. Buchanan & Co., 1886. 5-512 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

The author was for a long time attached to the University of Moscow, and studied Russian life, customs, and manners as shown in prince and peasant. There is a thread of story that serves to introduce the many social, political, and domestic details of life in this vast country. Men and women of all nations meet on Russian soil, and the differences in the manners and customs of different countries are brought out in bright conversations. The different plots, and intrigues are well invented. Ivan is introduced at twelve years and educated in various schools and colleges. A book sure to interest boys.

Hoey, Mrs. Cashel. A stern chase: a story in three parts. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 74 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 525.) pap., 20 c.

From the house of his father, a London physician, the hero goes to Cuba on a sketching tour, and meets his fate in a beautiful Creole girl, who runs away from her father's house to marry him, fearing the wrath of an unscrupulous cousin to whom she is engaged. On the voyage to England the hero is drowned but the wife saved. After suffering the direst poverty, she finally marries a very bad man, who, upon the death of her first husband's child, endeavors to palm off his own daughter on the English and Spanish relations of his wife. The plot is involved, and there are two villains who lie, steal or murder whenever their schemes require it. The sister of the hero is the good genius of the very sensational story.

Holbrook, Kennedy. How? or. spare hours made profitable for boys and girls. N. Y., Worthington Co., 1887 [1886.] 352 p. il. O. cl., $2 · $2.50.

The author first prepared this volume for the children of his own family, to afford them amusement and occupation on rainy Saturdays and during the long vacation. It was only an afterthought which led him to give it to the public. Boys and girls will find it a perfect treasure-house of suggestions and information. It tells them of all sorts of plays, and gives directions for making all kinds of things out of easily obtained materials. Many of the experiments suggested, while amusing, are at the same time scientific, opening to the youthful minds many new ideas. The work is handsomely printed and fully illustrated.

Holbrook, M. L., M.D. How to strengthen the memory; or, natural and scientific methods of never forgetting. N. Y., M. L. Holbrook & Co., [1886.] 3-152 p. D. cl., $1.

The author believes that the memory can be strengthened so as to be many times stronger than it would be without culture, and he goes to work in a plain, straightforward way to point out the most suitable methods. These are perfectly simple and strictly in accordance with the nature of the mind. There is nothing but what every one can understand and adapt to his own requirements. He makes free use of the suggestions and opinions of others, but is not without methods of his own. There are chapters on The memory of the aged; The memory of names and localities; The musical memory; The culture of memory in schools; The lawyers' and clergymen's memory; The relation of the health to the memory, and a multitude of suggestions and hints of the greatest value.

Holcomb, Mrs. Helen H. Mabel's summer in the Himalayas. Phil., Presb. Bd. of Pub., [1886.] 192 p. S. cl., 85 c.

Holden, Luther, M.D. Anatomy: a manual of dissection of the human body; 5th ed., rev. and enl., with new il., ed. by J: Langton, M.D. Phil., P. Blakiston, Son & Co., 1886. Il. O., oil-cloth, $4.50; cl., $5; leath., $6.

Holder, C: F: The ivory king: a popular history of the elephant and its allies. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 10+330 p. il. D. cl., $2.

The author is Fellow of the N. Y. Academy of Sciences, etc., and already known by his works on "The elements dology" and "Marvels of animal life." Eight hundred tons of ivory are used annually, and to obtain this nearly seventy-five thousand elephants are destroyed. The introduction of railways and the improvements which mark the progress of civilization in India make the extermination of the king of beasts a question of time only. The present volume treats the animal in all its relations to man, and the economic questions involved: in war, pageantry, sports and games, in its ancestral forms, structure and anatomy. A carefully selected bibliography of all the most important works, papers, and monographs relating to the elephant occupies eight pages. All the celebrated elephants are described and an interesting correspondence with Barnum about "Jumbo" occupies ten pages of the book.

Hollis, E. B. Cecil's cousins. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 300 p. 1 il. D. cl., $1.25.

Tells first of Cecil's hasty preparation for a visit to her cousins, and then of her arrival at the Thorndykes, where she seemed to find her own niche at once, becoming endeared to each member of the family, especially to Charlie Thorndyke, whom she wins from his wild companions by showing him the dangers of evil associations; Cousin Clara's romance and the funny episode which occurred on her wedding day add considerably to the story. By the author of "Cecil's summer," "Words and deeds," and "Glimpses through."

Hollister, O. J. Life of Schuyler Colfax. N. Y. Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 535 p. O. cl., $2.50.

A fascinating account of the life and career of a representative and typical American, who without means, without influential friends, but with a common school education, made himself a conspicuous figure in the great formative period of the United States. Mr. Colfax was born in New York City in 1823. In 1839 he went to Northern Indiana, where he remained, and devoted himself to journalism. He was a member of Congress for over fifteen years (1854 to 1869), during which time he was three times elected Speaker of the House. In 1868 he was elected Vice-President of the United States on the Republican ticket with General Grant. He died suddenly at Mankato, Minn., Jan. 13, 1885. The author, his brother-in-law, has had access to all the late Vice-President's public and private papers, which seem to have included a remarkably full collection of newspaper scraps referring to events in Mr. Colfax's career. These have been carefully worked into the text, throwing a strong contemporary light on the narrative. A free use has also been made of the correspondence of Mr. Colfax with eminent men. The Crédit Mobilier charges are elaborated and explained in two chapters, a full defence being given of Mr. Colfax's position, and the whole issue narrowed down to one of veracity between him and Oakes Ames.

Holloway, Laura C. The Buddhist diet-book. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 3–80 p. T pap., 50 c.

A compilation of dishes used by Buddhists in the East and in Europe. The interesting features of this work, aside from its value to vegetarians, are the explanations of the religious convictions of this sect regarding foods. The book is a quaint one printed in brown ink and white parchment covers.

Their united efforts lead to the founding of a village hospital, which does much enduring work.

Hopkins, Louisa Parsons. Educational psychology: a treatise for parents and educators. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1886. 1+96 p. T. cl., 50 c.

This treatise is the digest of a course of lectures given to the normal class of the Swain Free School, New Bedford, and is the result of long and attentive observation of mental phenomena and development, carefully selected reading, and such original thought and organizing power as the author brought to a subject, in which, as parent and teacher, she is deeply interested. The lectures are on: Psychology; Physiological psychology; Sense perception; Memory; Imagination; Judgment and reason; Taste, or the sense for beauty.

Hopkins, Tighe. 'Twixt love and duty a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 232 p S (Harper's handy ser., no. 52.) pap., 25c.

Marian Dean is the victim of circumstances, which cause a struggle in her heart 'twixt love and duty. She only learns of an unusual sacrifice made for her, by an intimate friend that she respects and trusts, after she has discovered she loves and is loved by "another." The story is English, opening in a little country town, and afterward changing to the Continent. The character sketching is excellent.

Hornbrook, Emma E. Marvelous in our eyes a story of Providence. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886] 2-169 p. D. (Cassell's rainbow ser.) pap., 25 c.

"Marvelous in our eyes" seems the way our destinies are shaped for us in spite of our best efforts to spoil our lives. The author strives to impress this lesson upon the readers of her story of a summer on an English coast. Four young girls and three men are the chief actors. The descriptions of scenery and the love of the sea occupy many pages. An ideal clergyman, who teaches the girls many lessons, and finally marries one of them, and a deformed fisher lad are interesting characters. The story on the whole, is a sad one.

Horstmann, G. H: Consular reminiscences. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 11+420 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Mr. Horstmann spent eleven years (from 1869 to 1880) at Munich as United States Consul, and five at Nuremberg in the same capacity. The varied experiences of a consul, which are oftener funny than serious, and too frequently entirely unconnected with his duties, are done full justice to in this narrative of his residence abroad. He made notes from the first of the events of his office; the result is a most amusing account of experiences founded on facts.

Hosmer, Ja. K. The story of the Jews. N.Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 19+381 p. il. D. (The story of the nations ser.) cl., $1.50.

The story of the Hebrew nation, as found in the Scriptures and related by Josephus and other writers, is here condensed for readers in the last stage of youth rather than in the first. The author was wise not to confine the story within the dimensions of a "juvenile" proper, as it is a picturesque and thrilling tale, full of dramatic features, any details of which it would have been a regret to sacrifice. Prof. Hosmer is not only impartial, but at times quite enthusiastic over the character whose best points he aims to illustrate. He has sought through history, fiction, and tradition in the concluding chapters of his work for well-known names, to give force to his conclusions relative to the Hebrew character. The many famous Hebrew financiers, musicians, statesmen, poets, and authors quoted show that the glory of the nation has not yet departed.

Hovey, Alvah, D D. Commentary on the Gospel of John. Phil., American Bapt. Pub. Soc., 1886. 423 p. O. cl., $2.

Hovey, Alvah, D.D., ed. The complete commentary on the New Testament: The Gospel of John. Phil., American Baptist Pub. Soc. [1886.] 423 p. O. cl., $2.25.

The fifth volume of the complete commentary on the New Testament that the American Baptist Publication Society has had in preparation for several years. The former volumes are on the Gospels of Mark and Luke, the Acts of the Apostles, and The Revelation. The whole series is under the editorship of Dr. Alvah Hovey. In the present volume we have a commentary that is exceedingly careful in its interpretation of the letter of the Gospel, while it is peculiarly successful in the development of its spirit. Its issue is very timely, as the International Lessons for 1886 begin with the Gospel of John, April 1, and continue with it until November 14.

How, W: Walsham. Poems. N. Y., E. & J. B. Young & Co., 1886 7+271 p. S. cl. net, $1.05.

Sixty-two poems, mostly of an idyllic nature, written in various metres. Besides these there are fifty-four hymns, a number of which are for special occasions, the rest for children. The author's work is full of religious fervor, and has decided literary merit.

How a village full of children ran away; and other stories. Bost., Estes & Lauriat, 1887 [1886.] 48 p. il. sq. O. bds., 40 c.

The text, the pictures, and the binding are especially adapted to the wants of small children.

How to be happy though married; being a hand-book to marriage: by a graduate in the university of matrimony. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 10+285 p D. cl., $1.25.

From chapter to chapter it grows more difficult to determine whether the writer is man or woman. Marriage is judged from all standpoints, and the advice and counsel given would seem to fit almost every combination of circumstances The writer shows much ingenuity in teaching by quotation from authors of every age and country. The foundation of all happy marriages must be unselfishness is the key-note of the book. A look at the excellent index shows the wide range of the material put to a decidedly happy use.

A history of horse-racing is the subject of the first chapter; the others discuss the progress of the sport, give a history of the Jockey Club, names of racing officials, an account of "Newmarket" racing in the provinces, breeding, treatment of yearlings, trainers, jockeys, etc. "Steeplechasing," the second part, has chapters on the origin and development of steeple-chasing, the selection of the horse, schooling, fences and fencing, riding the race, hurdle racing, etc. An appendix gives tabulated pedigrees of famous English horses. Index.

Howatt, Rev. J. Reid. The churchette: a year's sermons and parables for the young. N. Y., A. C. Armstrong & Son, 1887 [1886.] 13+279 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The author's habit is, before the close of the morning's service, and after the singing of a children's hymn, to give a few words—sermonette or parable—to the little ones. He feels he "can hardly expect the 'cossets'—the lambs—to gather with the flock unless he has a handful for them." These fifty-three little sermons are full of life and humor

Howe, E. W. A moonlight boy. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 3-342 p. por. D. cl., $1.50.

This is Mr. Howe's third novel, and while quite as intense as "The story of a country town" or "The mystery of the hiding," is lightened by a delightfully humorous style of narration. The teller of the story is "King Cole," "the moonlight boy," who will irresistibly remind the reader of Dickens's "Pip." He is found when a baby on the doorstep of the hospitable Coles, who take him in and adopt him as their own. He only learns when he is twelve years of age that a "moonlight" boy is a waif, left in the moonlight to the tender mercies of strangers. His story is commonplace, consisting of a happy youth spent in a Western town, and the subsequent years in New York, when it is supposed he has found his parents; and with his story are interwoven realistic scenes from journalistic life. The direct way, though, in which it is told, and its realism and earnestness, make it well worth reading.

Howe, Malverd A. Retaining-walls for earth: the theory as developed by Prof. Jacob J. Weyrauch; expanded and supplemented by practical examples, with notes on later investigations. N. Y., J: Wiley & Sons, 1886. 9+64 p. il. D. cl., $1.

"The following theory of Prof. Weyrauch," says Mr. Howe in his preface, "is presented for the use of the practical man, although, at the first glance, the array of mathematical formulæ may cause him to smile at such a statement. However, a brief examination of the results and their practical applications should convince him that a "long-felt want" has been supplied, not only in the graphical constructions that can be performed anywhere with the simplest instruments, but by formulæ so simple that substitutions can be made and solutions obtained in a very short time."

Howe, Maud. Atalanta in the south: a romance. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 345 p. S. cl., $1.25.

The mythological legend of Atalanta is repeated with a modern setting. Miss Margaret Ruysdale, a Northern girl and a genius, is adored by two men, neither of whom she seems to care very deeply for. The story takes place in New Orleans, where Miss Ruysdale and her father are spending the winter, the former having opened a studio, where she models her great work of "Atalanta." There is a sombre side to the book furnished by the story of Therese, a quadroon girl, whose lover is shot in a duel, and whose fate she attempts to avenge. Miss Howe seems to have a great talent for description, and but little invention. The plot is slight, but some of the pictures of New Orleans life and scenes are very graphic, while the character-sketching is full of power.

Howell, C: B. The church and the civil law. A manual of ecclesiastical law, with an appendix of forms. Detroit, C: B. Howell, 1886. 3+58 p. S. pap., 25 c.; cl., 50 c.

Howell, Mary Hubbard. Along the old road. Phil., American S. S. Union, [1885.] 3-352 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Opens on the Atlantic sea-coast in New England. The "old road" is the line of duty marked out in the Bible. The heroine is thwarted in her efforts at being a Christian by her parents, but after great trials overcomes her difficulties

Howells, W: D. The garroters: farce. N. Y., Harper, 1886 [1885.] 90 p. il. T. cl., 50 c.

A witty little play similar to "The elevator" in construction, and based upon an equally ridiculous incident; the characters of "The elevator" reappear here. First published in Harper's Magazine.

Howells, W: D. Indian summer. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 2+395 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A pair of lovers who have passed the meridian of life, but are still rich in mental and personal charms, are the excuse for Mr. Howells's title. The scene is laid in Florence, the actors all being Americans. The motive is simple and direct, and the story is told with much graceful wit in Mr. Howells's earlier and lighter vein. Has been a feature of Harper's Magazine during the past year.

Howells, W: D. The minister's charge; or, the apprenticeship of Lemuel Barker. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 3+463 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Mr. Sewell, the minister, who, it will be remembered, Silas Lapham and his wife once consulted regarding their daughters, is one of the leading characters Through some thoughtless praise that he bestows upon a crude poem shown him by Lemuel Barker, while spending his vacation in the country, Lemuel is influenced to come to Boston to seek a publisher. Mr. Sewell's conscience from henceforth cannot rid itself of its charge. Through all the misfortunes which happen to the boy, he feels himself morbidly to blame. Lemuel's career is such as has fallen to the experience of many country boys, coming friendless and penniless to a great city.

"The author considers at great length the problems which have arisen from our intricate system of transportation. He studies carefully the evils of the system, inquires into the power of legislation to cure them, and describes the remedies which will preserve the usefulness of the railways, and at the same time protect legitimate investors. The author believes that the power of discrimination in rates left with the railway managers is dangerous to the whole social fabric; that in the power of the government to maintain public highways lies a thorough remedy for existing evils; that when railways are made public highways in fact, instead of a legal fiction, then we may look to see the great principle of competition work so freely that discriminations in rates, the restrictions of pools, and the creation of monopolies will become as impossible upon railways as upon navigable rivers and lakes." —*N. This new English edition of "Les Misérables" is printed from the translation of Sir Lascelles Wraxall, who executed his task with the sanction and under the direction of the author. Two important passages and a chapter and book, highly characteristic of Hugo, omitted in Wraxall's original translation, are restored in this edition, and the whole translation thoroughly revised. The designs are bold and characteristic, and authentic as far as it has been possible to delineate the places and persons described. Many of Victor Hugo's own sketches adorn this volume. The paper is rich and highly finished, the margins most ample.

"'The splendid eloquence and heroic enthusiasm of Victor Hugo never found more noble and sustained expression than in this volume,' says Mr. Swinburne. In glow and color, it is a kaleidoscope of brilliant images, a dazzling procession of swiftly-moving and ever-varying thoughts. For it is not as a portrayal of Shakespeare's life and character that this work attains its chief significance. The salient facts in the great dramatist's career are rapidly sketched and the chief phases of his genius touched with a master-hand. But the work is vastly broader and deeper than its title, which, as the author himself says in his preface, should more properly have been 'Concerning Shakespeare.' Shakespeare's name is but the text on which he builds his grand discourse, wherein he touches the profoundest problems of life and art, the mission and responsibilities of genius and the part it must play in the advancement and elevation of the race."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Mr Hume in this story treats of some of the practical difficulties in solving the labor and other social problems It is an interesting and suggestive story It opens more than twenty years ago, in a boarding-house near Washington Square, in New York City; here the recluse dies, leaving the history of his life in MS, which his landlady falls heir to and publishes Humphrey, Frances A. The children of old Park's tavern: a story of the South Shore. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 284 p. S. cl., $1.

Mrs. Humphrey has skilfully interwoven the threads of history and fiction, and the result is a charming story, which recounts some incidents in the childhood of Dorothy Winslow and Ned Parks at the "old Park's tavern," built in Byfield about 1680. Although the scene is laid in Byfield, we have a passing glimpse of Hingham, Plymouth, Marshfield, and other historic towns along the south shore of Massachusetts Bay, as well as some pleasing reminiscences of Daniel Webster, Emily Marshall, and some New England celebrities who lived in the early part of the eighteenth century.

"The leading principles of the system of oratorical instruction advocated in this book may be briefly stated as follows: The aim of elocutionary instruction should be to awaken the internal feeling rather than to assume the external language of the feeling or emotion That is, the internal feeling should come first, not the external signs. The radical defect of nearly all systems of elocutionary instruction, which have hitherto appeared, is that they have not a philosophical basis. . . . In addition to the general treatment of the subject according to the principles of the human constitution, we have given a chapter descriptive of the temperaments and the style of elocution natural to each, which any teacher can study, and by observing the temperamental combinations of his pupils can adapt his instruction with the view of developing each one's natural styles of delivery."—Introduction.

Ingelow, Jean. John Jerome; his thoughts and ways: a book without beginning. Bost., Roberts Bros, 1886. 266 p. S. cl., $1.25.

Scarcely can be called a story, and yet the form is that of fiction. John Jerome discourses about innumerable things, such as the difference between caterpillars and silk-worms, the qualities of the ailanthus tree, etc., before he tells who he is and how he had been induced by his friend Katharina to write the present book. We further learn that he in his youth saved Katharina and her cousin Anna from drowning, and was so injured as to be lame in consequence. Katharina is a strong element of the book, the story becoming almost exciting when a doubt arises as to whether she will accept the right man. The thread of the story, however, is secondary to John Jerome's "thoughts," which relate to a wide range of subjects, including art and religion, and which fill many pages.

Lady Jackson has a special gift of description, which has full scope for its exercise in the brilliant courts of Francis I. and Henry II., whose reigns occupied the first part of the 16th century. The many pageants of marriages and deaths, notably, among the former, that of Mary of Scotland to the young Dauphin of France, are presented to the reader with a wealth of detail that is quite fascinating. This epoch is rich in many interests. It witnessed the beginning of the Reformation in France, and possessed the infamous Catherine de Medici. It was a period of great luxury and display, and one in which learning and the fine arts received a great impetus. Lady Jackson has done full justice to all these subjects.

"Many of the poems have long been favorites, and a re-perusal of them increases the favorable opinion with which they were first regarded. They are the outpourings of a woman's warm heart and have that spontaneous quality which we all admire in the verses of our best minor singers. The sonnets are clean cut, artistic productions, and the lyrics sing themselves into the memory like strains of delicious music. The shorter pieces are delightful, but Mrs. Hunt showed that she was capable of higher flights in 'The story of Boon.' This is told in flowing numbers, and with a felicity of description and richness of coloring that reproduce the tragic features that underlie all the glowing beauty of Eastern life."—Boston Gazette

Jackson, Mrs. Helen Hunt, ["H. H."] Zeph: a posthumous story. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1885. 253 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The scene is laid in Colorado. Zeph is a carpenter. He is married to "Rushy," a vain, passionate, discontented woman, who at intervals leaves his house and stays away for days, sometimes taking her children, sometimes not. Zeph's tender love for this woman, his patience and consideration, and the many plans and thoughts he has to make her home more attractive to her, are themes that Mrs. Jackson handles in her exquisite way. The story was broken off suddenly by her death. The rough outline of the plot as noted down in her papers has been added by the publishers.

Jacob Schuyler's millions. a novel. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 282 p. D. pap., 50 c.

"Jacob Schuyler's millions" is an American novel, the action taking place in New Jersey, near New York City and in the metropolis. The story is of strong interest, affording a graphic picture of life a quarter of a century ago. The characters are well portrayed, the style is fluent and easy, and the mystery surrounding Jacob Schuyler's millions is ingeniously managed.

Jak, [pseud.] The Riverside museum. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 306 p. il. D. cl., $1.25.

A sequel to "Birchwood." Those who read that book will remember that Mr. Plimpton had offered the use of an old vacant house on his place to his children and their young friends, upon condition that they should use it not as a mere play-house, but for some purpose tending to their improvement. After much thought and consultation the young folks decided to make a museum of it, for the purpose of studying and collecting specimens of natural objects in the neighborhood; and to this was added a library, consisting of donations of books and papers for the children themselves. The account of how the museum progressed through the fall and winter is contained in this volume. Almost all the old characters reappear, each one riding a hobby in search of "specimens" of some kind—birds, minerals, grasses, flowers, etc.

James, H: The Bostonians. a novel. N. Y., Macmillan & Co., 1886. 2+449 p. D. cl., $2.

The "Bostonians" is more a series of sketches than a story, the plot being a mere thread connecting them together, in which there is neither suspense nor surprises. The characters are taken from a special class of men and women—women chiefly—whom we are led to believe flourish in the atmosphere of Boston—mediums, lecturers, woman's rights women, philanthropists, and radicals of all kinds and degrees. Mr. James presented his people with such cruel attention to details, that those satirized were easily pointed out, much wrath and indignation being the natural consequence, in the novel's slow course through the Atlantic. Noble aims and purposes meet with the same vivisection and biting sarcasm that are bestowed upon the "cranks" and "frauds"—the whole tone of the book being pessimistic in the highest degree. Still it is a notable work, and one upon which Mr James has bestowed more care than anything he has ever written.

James, H: The Princess Casamassima: a novel. N. Y., Macmillan & Co. 1886. 2+596 p. D cl., $1.75.

The entire story finds scene in London. The characters are, with a few exceptions, from the working classes, and are all strongly imbued with socialistic principles; the Princess Casamassima and several of her trusted friends belong to a secret society, whose chief aim is the assassination of obnoxious persons of the nobility and the improvement of the condition of the poor. The hero Hyacinth Robinson, is a poor bookbinder whose birth is shadowed by a tragedy, and who owes the care of his early years to the charity of an unfashionable dressmaker, living in an obscure London street. He is fascinated by the "Princess," his weak nature making him a victim of a plot laid for others. The Princess' title is derived from her Italian husband; she is English by birth, with American blood in her veins, being, in fact, our old friend Christina Light, the heroine of "Roderick Hudson." The book is rich in elaborate character studies, and is one of the most interesting and popular in style of any James has written.

Janvier, T: A. The Mexican guide. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons 1886. 8+310 p. maps and plans, S. leath., $2.00.

Divided into two parts, the first being a traveller's guide, the second descriptive and historical. Mr. Janvier says in his preface: "This book contains the information that I felt the want of when I first went to Mexico. The theory upon which it is constructed is, that what can be easily found and plainly seen need not be laboriously described; that a traveller of ordinary intelligence, after being told what to look for, and where to look for it in a strange country, desires most to know the historic facts and associations connected with what he sees. Consequently, while I have not shrunk from using angular facts wherever clearness made such facts necessary, there are not many lengths, breadths, and thicknesses in this guide-book."

Jeans, J. S. England's supremacy: its sources, economics, and dangers. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 74 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 524.) pap., 20 c.
Aims to examine, "in the light of the most recent and reliable facts, some important and pressing economic problems of our time." The author claims that he has "proved to the hilt that within the last hundred years remarkable and continuous progress has been made in all the essential elements of prosperity and well-being." The work is a compilation of English statistics relating to labor, cost of living, taxation, education, etc.

Jeançon, J. A., M.D. Pathological anatomy, pathology and physical diagnosis: a series of clinical reports comprising the principal diseases of the human body. Cin., Progress Pub. Co., [J: Beacham, N. Y., agent,] 1885 [1886.] 100 p + 100 full page col. il., hf. mor., $30; or, in 5 pts., pap., $25.
In compiling the subjects of pathological anatomy for this work, the author was careful to select only such as were capable of representing typical forms of diseases, and used only those that were drawn from nature, under the immediate supervision of the reporter of the case. In giving the history of each case, he followed, verbatim, the original description, but in explaining the general and special pathology followed the most modern medical teachings and doctrines recognized by the profession as of standard authority, carefully avoiding all subjects still under controversy, and not considered as yet established. The same rules are observed, and the same methods followed, in the treatment of physical diagnosis. All the improved methods and appliances now in use in physical diagnosis are carefully set forth and described. The illustrations are with few exceptions colored, and life size. From an artistic point of view the work is as nearly perfect as art can make a representation of life.

Jefferies, R: The open air. N. Y., Harper & Bros., 1886. 179 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 85.) pap., 25 c.
A series of articles that have appeared from time to time in The Standard English Illustrated Magazine, Longman's Magazine, St. James's Gazette, Chambers's Journal, Manchester Guardian, Good Words, and Pall Mall Gazette. They breathe the warm sympathy with nature in all her many moods that is the great charm of the author of "Wood Magic," "Amateur Poacher," etc.

Jenkins, E: The secret of her life. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 210 p. D. pap., 25 c.
The author of "Ginx's baby," best known as a writer of social satires, has here attempted a novel. The effort is a most successful one. The scene is laid in the county of Somerset, England, and the story has for its motive the well-worn device of a young man being disinherited on account of marrying in opposition to his father. The father is a minister of the Church of England, a proud, obstinate man, who dies suddenly after making his unjust will. All he leaves his son Jack Poynts in an old desk of his mother's containing old papers. Many months after the rector's death, the examination of these papers shows that Jack is heir to a large fortune from his mother's brother, and also that a secret is contained within their pages which has a singular influence upon the lives of several of the characters. This mystery is well kept, holding the reader's interest securely all through.

Jerdon, Gertrude. Keyhole country: a story about things you would certainly see if you went through the keyhole. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 5+133 p. il, D. cl., $1.
Suggested by "Alice in wonderland." Gwendoline, a little girl recovering from a sickness and being left alone one afternoon tucked up among the cushions of the sofa in the sitting-room, is surprised to see a little old woman squeeze herself through the keyhole and drop upon the floor. After a short conversation she persuades Gwendoline to go back with her to "Keyhole country," from whence she has just come. Here Gwendoline meets the old man in the moon, the old woman who lived in the shoe, and other nursery favorites, and has many novel adventures.

Jerome, Miss Irene E. The message of the blue-bird told to me to tell to others. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1886. No paging, sq. O. pap., $1.
A dainty combination of song and illustration, designed as an Easter token, by the talented young artist of "One year's sketch-book." The pictures, which all shadow forth the dawning of spring and the reawaking of nature, are full of a most delicate grace. Though sent out in time for Easter, the little book is appropriate for any season. The eight full-page cuts are printed on one side of plate paper and are bound in covers of "imperial antique," knotted with floss silk.

Jerome, Irene E. Nature's hallelujah; il. and arranged by Irene E. Jerome. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1887 [1886.] 85 p. obl. O. cl., $6; tky. mor., tree cf. or Spanish cf., $12.
Somewhat similar in its general design to "One year's sketch-book." Consists of a series of nearly 50 full-page illustrations (9¾ x 14 in.), engraved by George T Andrew, and finely printed on rich tinted paper. They all symbolize nature's awakening in the spring, the birds, the flowers, etc., all singing "praise to the Lord." This idea is carried out throughout some beautiful landscapes, little bird pictures, and exquisite flower designs. Each page has a selection from a favorite poet.

Jevons, Frank Byron. A history of Greek literature from the earliest period to the death of Demosthenes. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 13+509 p. O. cl., $2.50.
This, like the preceding volume in the series—"A history of Roman literature"—is designed mainly for students in schools and universities, but it is also intended to be intelligible, and, it is hoped, will be found interesting to those who know no Greek. With this purpose, Greek and all points involving Greek scholarship have been relegated to the notes and appendices.

Jewett, Sarah O. Deephaven. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 4-255 p. S. (Riverside pocket ser., no. 1.) bds., 50 c.
A new series in neat boards binding; it is designed to include in it ten books which have already won popular favor.

Jewett, Sarah Orne. A white heron, and other stories. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., [1886.] 10+254 p. S. cl., $1.25
Of this collection of stories, "Farmer Finch" was reprinted from Harper's Magazine, two are new, and the rest were published in the Atlantic Monthly and other periodicals; they are quaint pictures of New England life, whose chief charm lies in simplicity of style and an indescribable something which is felt most in "A white heron," "Marsh Rosemary," and "The gray man." The binding, in white and sage cloth, with its appropriate design—a white heron—makes a very pretty volume.

Rev. "Sam Jones" was born in Alabama and educated in Georgia. He is now about forty years old. He became a preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1880, but feeling a call to be an Evangelist he left his special church, and now travels from state to state. His success is said to be equal to Mr. Moody's. This volume contains some of his most striking addresses.

"Tulip Place" is an aristocratic street of New York City, in which live the two families of the St. Nicholas and the Belts. Their fortunes and misfortunes make up a pleasant story. Camilla Belt at 21 inherits a fortune of ten millions from her grandfather, who was an inventor of a sewing-machine. Her travels, her dress and luxurious way of living, her ambition to marry a title, and the pursuit of her numerous admirers are full of interest, and graphically related.

Justina. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 249 p. S. (No name [third] ser.) cl., $1.

The purpose of this novel seems to be to illustrate the sacredness of the marriage tie. It is a story of New England, in which Justina Wilton's and John Rolfe's hopeless love for each other occupies the greater part of the narrative. Rolfe had as a boy been trapped into a marriage which had wrecked his whole life, but he had considered it his duty to patiently endure his troubles, until he grew to love Justina. The struggle that then comes to both of them, between love and duty, is full of pathos.

Keddie, Henrietta, ["Sarah Tytler," pseud.] Buried diamonds: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 73 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 532.) pap., 20 c.

An unsensational story of English country life, made up of love, domestic conflicts, a robbery, etc. The "buried diamonds" refer to a coal mine supposed to be on the land of John Prior, the Squire of Redcot, which is a source of much contention and heart burnings.

Keddie, Henrietta, ["Sarah Tytler," pseud.] Buried diamonds: a novel. N. Y., Norman L. Munro, [1886.] 261 p. S. (Munro's lib., no. 593.) pap., 20 c.

Kedzie, J. H. Speculations: solar heat, gravitation, and sun spots. Chic., S. C. Griggs & Co., 1886. 11+304 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

This work explains the phenomena treated of in its several divisions, by a single, well-defined principle; and while combatting many generally accepted beliefs, it advances a theory at once plausible and satisfying. The positions taken are strengthened by quotations from Newton, Faraday, and other eminent names in the realm of science.

Keenan, H F The aliens a novel. N Y., Appleton, 1886. 453 p. D. cl., $1.25

A city of western New York some fifty years ago is the chief scene of the story. The aliens are a family of Irish emigrants who come there with a little money, but who are finally separated and condemned to much sorrow and misery, through the father's brutality. The mother dies in a poorhouse, and the children have various fortunes their adventures and opposite lives taking up a greater part of the book. The family of the Governor of Warchester furnishes a contrasting picture, from a different grade of life—the son "Darcy" being one of the heroes, and having his fortunes inextricably mixed with those of the "aliens." The story is brought down to the time of the Mexican war. By the author of "Trajan"

Keeney, Dora Denison. Heartsease poems. Springfield, Homestead Job Print. [Phil., The Lutheran Pub. House.] 8-191 p. D. cl. $1.50.

A collection of graceful little poems on a variety of subjects. Some of the titles are "A Christmas carol," "New Year's eve," "The sleigh-bells," "Midsummer," "June roses," etc.

Keep, Rob. P. Greek lessons, prepared to accompany the grammar of Hadley & Allen. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 9+257 p. D. cl., $1.40.

The "lessons" are intended to serve as a companion and guide to the grammar, and in no sense to supersede it or take its place. The paradigms will therefore usually be learned in the grammar, yet, for the advantage of the beginner, some of the earlier paradigms have been given entire in the lessons. The rules of syntax are introduced as the need for them occurs. Contains also a list of fifty important verbs, and an English-Greek and a Greek-English vocabulary.

Keith, Leslie. The Chilcotes, or, two widows: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 63 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 537.) pap., 20 c.

The two widows, both named Chilcotes, and connected by marriage, cast their lot together after the death of Mr. Edward Chilcotes. They are young, beautiful, and wealthy, and of some social importance in London. Their sorrows and joys, their pleasures and amusements, and in a little while their love affairs make a very pretty readable story.

Kelley, J. D. Jerrold. A desperate chance. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 6+233 p. D. cl., $1.

The plot is most intricate, and requires the closest attention to understand the connection of events. Story begins in Paris with the death of a "gentleman" convict. Two women make and mar the lives of several men. An ingenious detective story, afterward introducing a voyage nearly around the world, of which the storms, shipwrecks, and handling of vessels show the nautical knowledge of the author.

Kennard, Mrs. E: Killed in the open: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 94 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 527.) pap., 20 c.

"This work is, as its title denotes, to a great extent what is commonly called a 'sporting novel'—that is, an attempt to give a graphic description of glorious runs, ozers safely negotiated, brooks gallantly charged, rides home along frosty roads, and the other stirring adventures which are met with by those who pursue the 'king of sports'—fox-hunting in the 'shire of shires.'"—Preface. The author's other novels are "The right sort," "Straight as a die," etc.

Kennard, Mrs. Nina H. Rachel. Bost., Roberts Bros 1886 4-307 p. S (Famous women ser.) cl., $1.

The life of Mademoiselle Rachel Felix, the celebrated French tragedienne, will always remain one of the most interesting and dramatic stories in the annals of the stage Mrs. Kennard goes into its details in this new volume of the "Famous women series," with unusual fulness; from her birth, through her many triumphs, and finally to her sad death, the full romance of her exceptional life is set forth. The spirit in which the author has written is found in the sentence, "We have tried to extract the poetry and romance there is to be found in this life, rejecting what is base and unworthy" Rachel's letters have been largely quoted from.

Kennard, J Spencer, D.D., comp. Wedding chimes. N. Y., Ward & Drummond, 1886. No paging, sq. S. cl., $1.

Bible texts and short extracts in prose and verse relating to marriage. The arrangement is very pretty, the Bible text being printed in red letters (Old English) in the centre of alternate pages; the opposite page holds the selections from secular literature, each one beginning with a decorative letter printed in red. A marriage certificate in blank, printed in colors, flowers etc., decorating it, opens the book. The cover is white cloth with gold lettering.

Kenyon, E. C. Margaret Casson's resolve: a tale of victory N. Y., T: Whittaker, [1886.] 3-190 p. D. cl., $1.

Margaret Casson had great strength of character, a resolute will, and faith that enabled her to make and keep a resolve which changed the entire course of her life but in the end won her a great victory. The book shows up some of the worst phases of intemperance.

King, A. F. A., M.D. A manual of obstetrics. 3d ed. Phil., Lea Bros. & Co., 1886. 3-379 p. il. D. cl., $2.

In preparing the third edition, some portions have been entirely rewritten, and throughout such alterations and additions have been made as were considered requisite to keep it fully abreast with recent advances in obstetric science. A number of new illustrations have been added from the works of Barnes, Lusk, Leishman, and Playfair, to whom the author acknowledges his indebtedness.

King, C: Marion's faith; a sequel to "The Colonel's daughter." Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 2+446 p. D. cl., $1.25.

"The colonel's daughter" was published in January, 1883. It dealt with the Indian campaigns in our Northwestern states. The leading characters reappear. Army life at West Point and army life in the wilds of the West are strongly contrasted. The heroism of the men and women ordered to the front to meet the treacherous Indians, is worked into a most interesting story. Marion keeps her "faith" in a young officer when an intriguing brother officer has made almost all lose confidence in his innocence of the crime of which he is accused. The descriptions of Western scenery are very fine. The author loves nature and the army almost equally. The time is the Centennial year. The story deals with the campaigns in which General Custer fell.

King, Thorold, [pseud.] Haschisch: a novel. Chic., A. C. McClurg & Co., 1886. 314 p. S. cl., $1; pap., 50 c.

The book gains its title from the use made of the Oriental drug haschisch in the detection of a crime. A murder and robbery are committed in a large hotel in New York, under very mysterious circumstances. The suspected man is finally tracked to Paris, and is cleverly brought into a plot, by which he is induced to try the effects of haschisch; in place of its affording him a pleasurable sensation, as he expected, its influence causes him to enact again all the details of the murder and robbery. The book was evidently written for a purpose, which the author loses no time in developing.

Kirby, Georgiana Bruce. Years of experience: an autobiographical narrative. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1887 [1886.] 3+315 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Georgiana Bruce Kirby was born in Bristol, England, in Dec., 1818. She was of an inquiring mind and constantly snubbed by the narrow-minded people about her.

She became governess at an early age and emigrated to Canada with her employers. She drifted into the Unitarian Church and finally espoused the Brook Farm experiment, and, becoming acquainted with many of the leading reformers of the day, she gave much of her time to the new ideas so actively discussed in that day, mesmerism, hydropathy, prison reform, anti-slavery work, etc., etc. Some of the author's experiences at Brook Farm have already been given in the Overland Monthly.

Knox, T: W. The boy travellers in the Russian Empire: adventures of two youths in a journey in European and Asiatic Russia, with accounts of a tour across Siberia, voyages on the Amoor, Volga, and other rivers, a visit to Central Asia, travels among the exiles, and a historical sketch of the Empire from its foundation to the present time. N. Y., Harper, 1887 [1886.] 505 p. il. O. cl., $3.

The plan adopted for the "Boy travellers in the far East" and "Boy travellers in North America" has been closely followed. Mr. Knox has been three times in the Russian Empire and has seen much that he describes, although he draws frequently upon the works of others, many of which are mentioned in the narrative. Illustrations have been freely used from other works on Russia published by the house, and the result is a copiously illustrated volume that pictures almost everything of note in Russia. Handsomely bound and decorated with Russian arms and Russian scenes.

Knox, T: W. The life of Robert Fulton; and a history of steam navigation. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 10+507 p. por. and il. D. cl., $1.75.

"In the belief that a history of steam navigation combined with a biography of the man who designed and built the first successful steamboat would be of general interest, the author has prepared this volume. He has avoided the use of technical terms wherever possible, in order that the work might prove acceptable to youthful or non-scientific readers as well as to those with whom steam navigation is a special study. The materials for the life of the inventor have been drawn from many sources. The author acknowledges his indebtedness to the biographies of Fulton by Colden, Renwick, and Reigard; to 'Life and letters of Joel Barlow,' by C Burr Todd; and also to the officers of the New York Historical Soc. for the use of records in their possession. In the history of steam navigation he has been greatly aided by the work of Admiral Preble upon the same subject; by Professor Thurston's 'History of the growth of the steam engine;' Bourne's 'Catechism;' King's 'Practical notes for students and engineers;' and by other books of a similar nature."—Preface. Many of the illustrations are reproductions of Fulton's original drawings.

Lang, Andrew. In the wrong Paradise, and other stories. N. Y., Harper, 1887 [1886.] 3+255 p. S. hf. cl., 60 c

Contents: The end of Phæacia; In the wrong Paradise; A cheap nigger; The romance of the first radical; A duchess's secret; The house of strange stories; In Castle Perilous. The great Gladstone myth, My friend the Beachcomber.

Lang, Andrew. Letters to dead authors. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 6+234 p. S. cl., $1.00.

Graceful and reverential criticisms, written very much in each author's own style, upon the works of twenty-two famous authors. Thackeray, Dickens, Pierre de Ronsard, Herodotus, Pope, Rabelais, Jane Austen, Isaac Walton, Dumas, Poe, Scott, Byron, Horace, and Theocritus are among the "dead authors" to whom Mr. Lang has addressed letters. In all cases they are charming reading—a little incisive, perhaps, but always entertaining. The little volume is a dainty specimen of book-making, with a narrow page and wide margins, and uncut edges, top gilt.

Lang, Andrew. The mark of Cain. Authorised ed. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 3-173 p. D. pap., 25 c.

The "mark of Cain" is a small pattern used in tattooing, which is said to correspond with the shart or tribal mark which Jehovah appointed to Cain in the patriarchal story. This mark is seen upon the body of a nobleman's son, who for the sake of inheriting property has sacrificed the life of his friend, and by its means he is most ingeniously brought to justice. Scene laid in London. The inventor of a flying machine figures prominently.

Lanman, C: Haphazard personalities; chiefly of noted Americans. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1886. 3-387 p. S. cl. $1.50.

The varied experiences of Charles Lanman in mercantile life and as a journalist, author, and artist, and as a government official in Washington brought him into contact and made him good friends with many noted men of the day. The thirty-eight chapters that he devotes to as many eminent men give most interesting revelations of character, derived from his own experience and personal observation. The names of Irving, Bryant, Henry Clay, Winfield Scott, George B. McClellan, Longfellow, Everett, Horace Greeley, Charles Dickens, and Kane, the Arctic explorer, may be mentioned among many others equally famous. Mr. Lanman is the author of the "Private life of Daniel Webster."

Laroom, Lucy, comp. Beckonings for every day a calendar of thought; arranged by Lucy Larcom. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886 3+225 p. S. cl., $1.25.

Extracts in prose and verse from various authors, for every day in the year; the compiler has grouped her material by months, connecting the whole by a little thread of thought of her own. The book grew out of Miss Larcom's desire to share with others thoughts which had given "uplift and enlargement to her own life." The extracts of each month represent special subjects, as January, "The invisible presence," Feb., "Our work," March, "Our neighbors." Good index.

Lawless, Emily. Hurrish: a study. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 208 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 61.) pap., 25 c.

A tale of Ireland, the scene being laid in the County Clare, near Limerick. Hurrish is a well-to-do peasant, who commits a murder under circumstances which almost justify the deed, and is in turn shot by the brother of the murdered man. There are many strong and admirable points about Hurrish's character, which the writer shows special talent in delineating. There is a series of character sketches, in fact, all most graphic and artistic—Hurrish's mother and little sweetheart, and Maurice Brady being drawn with unusual power.

Lee, Rev. Alfred. Eventful nights in Bible history. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 5-423 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Taking such remarkable night scenes from the Bible as "The promise to Abraham," "Jacob's vision at Bethel" and at "Peniel," "The night of the Exodus," "The passage through the Red Sea," "Belshazzar's feast," and 9 other from the Old Testament, and 17 from the New, such as "The flight into Egypt," "The visit to Nicodemus," "The transfiguration," etc., the author gives not only a graphic picture of the event, but preaches a sermon full of suggestions and good counsel. He is Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Delaware

Lee, F: G:, D.D. King Edward the Sixth, supreme head: an historical sketch, with an introduction and notes. N. Y., Catholic Pub. Soc. Co., 1886. 24+261 p. D. cl., net, $2 80.

The author claims that "the Tudor changes of the greatest constitutional importance to Englishmen have been long marvellously misrepresented both as to the aim of those who brought them about, and as to the direct social and religious consequences of such changes upon the nation and the empire in general." The work is clear and logical from a Roman Catholic standpoint. There is a list of the existing portraits of Edward the Sixth and other noted personages mentioned; a chronology of the reign and a full general index. Also copious foot-notes, and quotations from many noted historians.

Lee, Harriet and Sophia. Canterbury tales. New ed. Bost, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 3 v. 3+363; 384; 2+431 p. D. cl., $3.75.

These tales were first published at the end of the last century. They were in fashion among the contemporaries of Lord Byron in his youth, and received most favorable notice from the critics for their attractiveness and originality. Byron made use of one for the plot of "Werner," the only drama he wrote that ever had a stage success.

"Ottilie" is a little story of a sister's self-sacrifice and a brother's selfishness: the scene is laid in Germany. The second story is a fantastic Italian tale, which will amuse both young folks and grown people.

Lee, Vernon, [pseud. for Miss Violet Paget.] A phantom lover: a fantastic story. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 1+134 p. S. flex. cl., 50 c.

The story of Mrs. Oke, of Okehurst, who had a phantom lover that excited her husband's jealousy to such a pitch that he shot her and then blew his own brains out, is unique in its way. An artist who went to Okehurst, a beautiful English home in Kent, to paint the portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Oke, tells the story. There is an old legend in the family of an ancestress who slew her lover, and it is the spirit of this lover that divides Mr. and Mrs. Oke.

Leighton, J:, D.D. Gospel faith commended to common-sense. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 139 p. S. cl., 75 c.

This book was prepared by Dr. Leighton, well known throughout the Presbyterian Church, before his death. It may be characterized as an exhaustive scientific treatise of this fundamental theme of the Bible. It is eminently scriptural.

Leighton, J:, D.D. The Jewish altar: an inquiry into the spirit and intent of the expiatory offerings of the Mosaic ritual; with special reference to their typical character. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 3–127 p. D. cl., 75 c.

A valuable work on Old Testament typology. It is written with singular clearness, conciseness, and painstaking care. It is a timely and scriptural contribution to the better understanding of the ritual of the Jewish altar service. The author's views conflict with the common interpretation of much of the Mosaic ritual.

Leighton, R. F. First steps in Latin : a complete course in Latin for one year, based on material drawn from Cæsar's "Commentaries," with exercises for sight reading, and a course of elementary Latin reading. Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 10+431+76 p. D. cl., $1.22.

The book opens with a short and easy review of English grammar. In the lessons, the changes in the forms, uses, and relations of words are explained and illustrated, so far as is practicable, from English. Special attention is given to order and arrangement. The simple verb-forms, which are easier than nouns, and open the way to a wide range of expression, are presented first. Both the English and the Roman methods of pronunciation are explained. The vocabulary (76 p.) and the examples to illustrate the rules of syntax are mostly drawn from the first book of Cæsar.

Lemcke, Ernst. Skat ; the German game of cards. [Anon.] N. Y., B. Westermann & Co., 1886. 24 p. il. S. pap.. 30 c.

Explains the German national game of cards, traces its origin, and gives rules for playing it, fully illustrated by pictures of the cards.

Letters from a chimney-corner : a plea for pure homes and sincere relations between men and women. Chic., Fergus Printing Co., 1886. 50 p. D. pap., 25 c.

These letters were originally published in the Chicago Inter Ocean, where they attracted considerable attention, from their earnestness and frankness. They are said to have been written by a lady well known in Chicago society, who is not in favor of giving the franchise to woman, although she has decided opinions regarding their "rights." Her suggestions as to woman's duties, and the influence she should exert in the home, are well worthy of serious attention.

The story is told in the shape of an autobiography, and dwells for a time on the early home of the hero, Roderick Douglas, before relating his adventures on land and sea, his capture by the pirates, his love affair with Nellie Morton, and final reunion with old friends

Life (The) of a prig, by one; from the 2d English ed. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. 5-130 p. S. cl., $1.

In autobiographical form is related the experience of a young man in his search for the true religion. The little book is a satire, the writer amusingly dwelling upon his own perfections and the failings of others. His career embraces a trial of the Anglican and the Roman Catholic Church, and a brief experience of Buddhism and agnosticism.

Light on the hidden way; with an introduction by Ja. Freeman Clarke. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 5-133 p. S. cl., $1.

Said to be written by an educated and intelligent woman, who is regarded by her friends as sincere, truthful, and conscientious. She gives a narrative of her experience with the inhabitants of the unknown world. From her childhood she was in the habit of seeing and communicating with "spirits." With her growth her gift of spiritual insight grew, and she finally became the centre of a little group of "spirits" who sought her advice and aid. They are represented as persons who in this world "missed their way upward," and who even in the promised land were dissatisfied and unhappy. Mr. James Freeman Clarke calls the narrative "a story," but though it is "remarkable," as he says, it is simply a relation of a spiritual experience.

Lillie, Mrs. Lucy C. Jo's opportunity. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 2+175 p. il. S. cl., $1.

Jo Markham lived in the sailors' district of a New England village, until Faith Emerson recognised the depth of the girl's nature, and began the missionary work which ended in Jo's finding her opportunity in the care of "Faith's Cottage," Faith Emerson's legacy to sick children. There are two phases of life represented—wealth and extreme poverty—but the story really gains its beauty from the ideality of Faith Emerson.

Lillie, Mrs. Lucy C. Rolf House. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 4+266 p. il. sq. S. (Harper's young people ser.) cl., $1.

A continuation of "Nan," who is again the heroine. Readers of Harper's Young People remember Nan left at her Aunt Letty's with the prospect of becoming her heiress. Through the machinations of her cousins Aunt Letty's will is lost, and Nan first spends some time keeping a store of worsteds, silks, and crewels, and giving lessons in fancy work. All the young people of the former book reappear. Phyllis, badly hurt by an accident, becomes patient, and the good influence of Nan's and her cousin's lives.

Lillie, Mrs. Lucy C. The story of music and musicians for young readers. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 5-245 p. il. S. (Harper's young people ser.) bds., $1.

This work, Mrs. Lillie explains, is not intended to take the place of text-books, works on harmony or thorough-bass, or lives of the great musicians. Its object is only to interest young students in music in the technique of their art and in the associations amid which great masters have worked. Only such rules of harmony are given as have a direct bearing upon the subject or composition under discussion, and these have been presented, after comparing them with standard authorities, in as simple a fashion as possible. A large part of the work appeared in instalment in Harper's Young People, where its attractive style, numerous anecdotes and illustrations made it very popular.

Lindau, Paul. Klaus Bewer's wife; from the German by Clara S. Fleishman. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. 3-253 p. S. (Leisure hour ser., no. 195.) cl., $1. Same, Leisure moment ser.) pap., 50 c.

Klaus Bewer is the son of a rich Lubeck ship-owner. At twenty-five he tires of life in his father's counting house and goes off to Sumatra. Here all he touches turns to money. At thirty-three he becomes homesick, winds up his business, and returns to Lubeck. On the evening of his return he visits a variety theatre and falls in love with a second-rate ballad singer, invites her to supper, and within a week marries her. The little details of their married life are brightly told. The author's point is that the wife of a cultured man must have developed in the same social atmosphere or one similar to his own. Men do not require learned women, but all that is beautiful and good: faith, morality, love, friendship, truth, etc. Klaus Bewer's brother's wife and her sister form the contrasting picture to his Bohemian love. The book is well translated.

Linderfelt, Klas August. Systematic catalogue of the public library of the city of Milwaukee, with alphabetical author, title and subject-indexes, 1885. Milwaukee, published by the board of trustees of the library, 1885-'86. 140+1671+34 p. Q. cl., $3.50.

This catalogue comprises all the works at present contained in the Milwaukee Public Library, aggregating about 35,000 volumes. It is arranged in three divisions, the second division being the main catalogue, which is arranged first under the following comprehensive classes, viz., bibliography and unclassified works, philosophy, religion and theology, sociology, philology, natural science, useful arts, fine arts, literature, history and geography, biography; and, second, under numerous sub-divisions—biography having a special index of its own, and fiction, which is embraced under literature, being entered under both author and title; in all other classes, the work is only entered under the author's name. As keys to the main catalogue there are two excellent author and subject-indexes. There are also some useful lists, such as "Tittles of nobility," "Abbreviations," and "Synopsis of Classification."

Linton, Mrs. E. Lynn. Paston Carew, millionaire and miser: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 77 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 549.) pap., 20 c.

The hero, an illegitimate child, rebels against his surroundings, leaves his father's house, and goes to work to make a fortune. He is superstitious, and believes firmly in "Planchette," whose oracular utterances are quoted throughout. His one redeeming point is his love for his daughter, whose life, after many trials becomes a useful and happy one.

The object in view is twofold: first "to strengthen those who are already in actual conformity with the Anglo-Catholic church;" second, "to call the attention of our non-conforming brethren, Roman and Protestant alike, to the historic continuity, the divine authority, the lawful jurisdiction, the true Catholicity and the practical advantages of the venerable church of their ancestors and ours; the Mother-church of the English-speaking race."

Little, Rev. C: E., comp. Historical lights: a volume of six thousand quotations from standard histories and biographies. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 5+958 p. O. cl., $5.

"This volume is the outgrowth of certain lines of historical readings, originally designed for the author's personal benefit, and to aid in the preparation of sermons and addresses. After nearly twenty-five years of reading and brief indexing of facts and incidents, a mass of quotations has accumulated and under the natural law of selection this volume represents 'the survival of the fittest.' This collection is both religious and secular, and the quotations are especially fitting the needs of preachers, pleaders in court, political speakers, and writers for the press. The topical arrangement of these quotations, the extensive cross-reference index, and index of personal names greatly facilitate their use for rapid reference."—Preface.

A clear, impartial, and concise narrative of European history during the last four centuries. No attempt has been made to go into the details of the domestic history of each State, a task which would require as many volumes as there are States. The history of England especially has been omitted, as it was treated fully in another volume of the series, except as far as it is directly connected with the history of the continental states. The author has endeavored to avoid the baldness of a chronological summary, and to group the history of the different States around the central current of European affairs. This method has necessitated frequent repetitions, but it appeared the lesser evil of the two. A full chronological table prefaces the work, and a good index completes it.

Log of the Ariel in the Gulf of Maine; il. by L. S. Ipsen. Bost., Cupples Upham & Co., 1886. No paging, il. obl. S. pap.,

"An entertaining narrative of a summer excursion in the steam-yacht Ariel. It is crisply and brightly written, and copiously and cleverly illustrated by Mr. L. S. Ipsen, whose drawings intersect the text, and flow over into full-page pictures with most pleasing results. The letter press is reproduced in fac-simile of the original writing, and this and the pictures are printed in ink of a sepia tint, the whole forming an attractive and somewhat unique book, highly artistic and novel in effect. In paper, printing and mechanical excellence generally it is a very pretty and interesting specimen of book-making, and does ample credit to the taste of its publishers."—Boston Gazette.

An entirely new and complete edition of Mr. Longfellow's writings, including his prose works in two volumes, his poems in six, and his translation of Dante's Divina Commedia in three. It embraces all that Mr. Longfellow included in the latest edition of his works, together with all those pieces which have appeared since his death, with the sanction of his representatives. The text used is the last revised by the author, and is printed with scrupulous care to insure accuracy. Foot-notes to the poems show the various readings, as found in each case in the form of the poem as it appeared when first printed in a volume. Head-notes are frequently prefixed to poems, giving information respecting their suggestion and composition. It is designed to make this edition not only complete, but systematic in arrangement, and furnished with all literary, historical, biographical, and bibliographical equipment necessary to a full understanding and enjoyment of Mr. Longfellow's writings. There are several fine steel portraits of Longfellow from approved paintings and photographs, representing him at different periods of his literary career.

"The lovers of Longfellow would have chosen, if their preference had been asked, just such a simple record of his beautiful life as the care of a brother has here given us. Almost the whole story is told by the poet's own pen, in correspondence with his family and friends, and in transcripts from the interesting journal which he kept from the time of his first visit to Europe at the age of twenty almost until the close of his life at the age of seventy-five. No portrait of a sweet and noble character could be more life-like than that which he has unconsciously drawn of himself in these diaries and letters. The likeness is perfect; the narrative is nearly complete; and the biographer has shown admirable tact and sympathy by making no attempt to improve them. Only where a few paragraphs or notes are necessary to fill gaps or explain allusions does the Rev. Samuel Longfellow allow himself to appear upon the scene, and then his remarks are always apt and judicious."—New York Tribune

Longhead, Flora Haines. The man who was guilty Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 4+398 p. S. (The Riverside pap. ser., no 18.) pap., 50 c.

A strongly written and well-reasoned story. The scene is laid in San Francisco. A well-educated and well-connected young man in a position of trust in a bank embezzles ten thousand dollars. Following his first impulse, he flies on the verge of discovery, but comes back, stands his trial bravely, acknowledges his guilt, and expiates his offence by ten years' hard work as a convict. On his release he determines to return to the scenes of his youth and live down his disgrace by working hard and paying back the money he has stolen. The rebuffs and insults he receives and the mistrust he meets with almost everywhere almost break him down. But he succeeds in getting work at last, and after years of patient industry reinstates himself with his old friends. Some sensible suggestions about prison reform add to the value of the book.

From a large number of autograph letters and documents pertaining to the Washington and Custis families, and from other papers found at Arlington House, from bits of trustworthy information picked up here and there, sometimes by accident but more frequently by research, during the past thirty-five years, Mr. Lossing has succeeded in gathering much knowledge concerning the mother and wife of Washington, which has hitherto been unrevealed to the public. In delineating the career of Martha Washington he has mingled sketches of events in the private and public life of her husband in which she was directly or indirectly a participant—such as amusements, fêtes, military reviews, receptions, entertainments, hospitalities at Mount Vernon, and notably the life at various head-quarters of the army during the war for independence at which they resided together.

The "young girls" are daughters of a merchant tailor who dies after being robbed by his partner. They are penniless, and without accomplishments to turn into money, except a gift at mending. After making a success of mending a hole in a carpet, luck favors them, and they help others, and give much useful advice to young women looking for work. The motto is: "Be willing to do what you can do, not what you wish you could do."

Lotze, Hermann. Outlines of psychology: dictated portions of the lectures of Hermann Lotze; tr. and ed. by G: T. Ladd. Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 8+157 p. D. cl., $1.
This is the fourth volume in the series of "Outlines," following the "Metaphysic," "Philosophy of religion," and "Practical philosophy." It treats of simple sensations, the course of representative ideas, of attention and inference, of intuitions of objects as in space, of the apprehension of the external world by the senses, of errors of the senses, of feelings, and of bodily motions. Its second part is "theoretical," and discusses the nature, position, and changeable states of the soul, its relations to time, and the reciprocal action of soul and body. It closes with a chapter on the "Kingdom of souls."

Louis, Arthur. Dollars or sense: a tale of every-day life in England and America. N. Y., Brentano Bros., 1886. 3-376 p. D. cl., $1.50.
Begins in London with a fashionable ball, handsome men, bright girls, and much enjoyment. The girls with whom the story chiefly deals are Americans, who have been educated in Dresden. Much travel, much repartee, little work, and few cares fall into the lives of heroes and heroines. At the end there is a wedding and the reader is left to determine whether "dollars or sense" led to matrimony.

Lowe, C. Prince Bismarck an historical biography. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 2 v. 21+639; 10+633 p. pors. O. cl., $5.

"This is the first attempt, by an English writer, to place before his countrymen a complete historical sketch of the career of the great German statesman; . . . they have hitherto been without a connected and elaborate account of his whole career from a purely English point of view, and these volumes are intended to supply this much-felt want. Aiming as they do at recording in as complete a manner as possible the personal achievements of the greatest man of the age, they at the same time claim to be regarded as a political history of modern Germany. . . ."—Preface. The first volume brings the history of Bismarck's life down to the close of the Franco-German war. The second covers the period from 1871 to 1885. An appendix gives the text of treaties of Vienna (1864), of Prague (1866), of Frankfort (1871), and the convention of Gastein (1865); also the Prussian and liberal constitutions, with portraits of the prince at 19 and at 73. Mr. Fortescue's health fails and he is ordered to take a sea-voyage to Australia. His wife accompanies him, and Ethel, the oldest daughter, is left in charge of her brothers and sisters. Her trials and successful efforts to fill her mother's place are prettily told.

Lowndes, Cecilia Selby. New honors, il. by Edith Scannell. N. Y., F: Warne & Co., [1886.] 4-194 p. S. cl., $1.

The Despard family consisted of the parents and eight children, amongst them an invalid boy of four years. The story tells of a summer at the seaside and the children's games and little troubles. Mr Despard's brother dies and he inherits the title of an English lord, and Tom, the oldest son, becomes Lord Eltield. These are the "new honors." The mother teaches successfully that power brings responsibility.

Ludlow, Ja. M. The captain of the Janizaries: a story of the times of Scanderbeg and the fall of Constantinople. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1886. 2+404 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Janizaries is derived from a Turkish word meaning "new troops. In 1329 regiments of infantry were organized, made up of Christian captives, who were compelled to embrace Mohammedanism. The greatest success of these foot soldiers was under Scanderbeg, the son of an Albanian Christian prince, whose principality had been taken from him by the Turks. Scanderbeg was given as hostage to the Turkish ruler, who had him educated in Islamism, and for whom Scanderbeg fought valiantly until convinced of his father's wrongs, when he used the trained soldiers to fight against the Turks, and won twenty-two well-contested battles. The story of the fall of Turkish supremacy is instructively told in the form of romance. The historical details are correct

Lyall, Edna. Donovan a modern Englishman: a novel. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 6+456 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The hero is introduced at eighteen, in disgrace and expelled from school. His father's kindness touches his better nature, and influences him to improve. The father's sudden death brings about many changes, and Donovan falls into the temptation of gambling, sporting, and idleness, and also becomes a confirmed atheist. The author shows great skill in presenting both sides of a picture. The influence of a happy home and the great power of good women are strongly brought out. The plot is interesting, the style simple and poetic. There is a touch of Dickens in the portraiture of "Dot." Donovan's invalid child-sister.

Lyall, Edna. In the golden days. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 207 p. S. hf. cl., 75 c.

A character novel of the Restoration period, by the author of "Donovan" and "We Twe." The hero, Hugo Wharncliffe, suggests in a great measure the character of "John Inglesant," being a fine type of manhood, full of moral and physical courage. A few real characters play a secondary part in the book—Algernon Sydney, Francis Bampfield, John Griffith, the Delannes, the little Duchess of Grafton, John Evelyn, Ferguson, Betterton the actor, etc.

Lyall, Edna. We two: a novel. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 5+403 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A sequel to "Donovan." Introduces the daughter of the atheist Raeburn, an original creation in fiction, who, like Donovan, is finally won over to ideal Christianity. Charles Osmond, the Christian clergyman, his son Brian, the Christian physician, his brother, the bigotted surgeon, all reappear, and act their parts even more tellingly than in the first volume. The author evidently has her purpose near at heart, but works for it in a manner that shows great talent as a novel writer. The heroine spends two years in a French school, and this episode furnishes some pleasing scenes.

Lyall, Edna, [pseud.] Won by waiting: a novel. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 3+395 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The story opens in France just before the French and German war. M. de Mabillon and his son Gaspard and daughter Espérance are obliged to give up their country home on account of straitened means, and to live very humbly in Paris. They are prisoners there during the siege and commune, the father being shot while aiding in the defence of the city. M. de Mabillon's wife had been an Englishwoman, whom he had married against the wishes of her father, the Dean of Rilchester. His children, in their poverty and distress, are, much against their will, forced upon their father's death to appeal to their grandfather for help. They go to England, and while Gaspard starves in London, Espérance receives a cold welcome at the Deanery. The unhappiness she suffers, brought into contact with the narrow, cold natures of her mother's people is very touching. Both the young people, after much injustice and indifference, win their way to a better standing with their relatives, and to a better worldly position. The book is a novel, Espérance's and her cousin's love affairs being told in detail.

Lyford, Rev. C. P. The Mormon problem: an appeal to the American people. N. Y., Phillips & Hunt, 1886. 323 p. D. cl., $1.

This work is the result of thirteen years of careful study and research, four of which were spent in Utah. The author claims that polygamy is not by any means the most dangerous feature of Mormonism, but "that Utah is the seat of a vast conspiracy against the United States Government, by the establishment therein of a treasonable "theocracy;" that Mormonism is but another name for a great ecclesiastical empire, and also of a general system of organized crime and outlawry." The numerical, political, and ecclesiastical strength of the Mormons, the author thinks, has thus far been but faintly realised.

M., C. S. Ralph Weston's secret; or, unto the fourth generation. Phil., Presb. Bd. of Pub., [1886.] 247 p. il. S. cl., $1.

The author aims to show up intemperance and to demonstrate that it is often an hereditary disease; this idea is well carried out in the story of the Westons, refined and wealthy Philadelphians, who inherited this vice from their mother's family. One of each generation for four successive ones fell a victim to the insatiate longing for strong drink. "Ralph's secret" was the knowledge that his mother had become a drunkard.

MacAlpine, Avery. Teresa Itasca, and other stories. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 3+294 p. D. cl., $1.

There are three stories, "Teresa Itasca." "Æfriga: a romance of the North Sea:" and "The omen of the moon." The scene of the first is laid in Las Rosas, supposed to be a province in Southern Mexico. A torrid scene for a wildly improbable story of betrayed trust, told with much pathos. Teresa finds out after some years of marriage, that her supposed husband is lawfully wedded to a woman who travels half over the world to claim him. Teresa gives him up and disappears and finally dies before he finds her. The heroine of the second story is a beautiful fisher-maiden, deceived by a prince. After her death her son is brought up by the princess. The last is a short tale of happy love, of which the scene is first the coast of France and then the shores of America. Canvas binding and red lettering

The well-known Irish M. P. has produced a delightful burlesque of the "sensation novel," full of wildly exciting incidents which lead to nothing, and invested with horrible mystery, which he pronounces himself "one of those things no fellow could understand." In an amusing preface, it is claimed that the book was written by the author and his wife, each half quite independent of the other, and then dovetailed together chapter by chapter; and it really reads as if it had been so constructed.

"Princess" is the familiar title given to Miss Pocahontas Mason by her friends and family. The story is of Virginia after the war, a greater part of it being enacted upon the Mason plantation. The Masons pride themselves upon being descended, from the historical Pocahontas—her name having been borne by eight different Masons of successive generations. A General Percival Smith, an ex-brigadier of the Union army, buys a place near the Masons, and transplants his family from their Northern home, hoping the climate of Virginia will lengthen the life of his invalid son. The Northern and Southern characters are ably contrasted, and the different methods of living, and opposite ways of viewing the same question, well illustrated. The usual love story has an unusual element in having for a hero a divorced man. Whether or no any law, human or divine, stands in the way of his marrying again is warmly discussed.

McClure, A. K. The south; its industrial, financial, and political condition. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 257 p. D. cl., $1.

Written by the editor and proprietor of the Philadelphia Times, a publication well known for its fairness and independence in politics. The work is the result of several recent journeys in the Southern states, during which the grave political, business, and race problems were dispassionately and industriously studied. Mr. McClure's views are full of hope for the future of the South. He dwells enthusiastically upon its wealth of coal and iron, and upon its beautiful and varied climate, its forests and streams, and the rapid progress it is making against war prejudices and war troubles. He believes the time is not distant when we will see the turn of the tide of foreign immigration from the West to the South, and the concentration of skilled labor and capital from the North. The style is popular and interesting.

A vindication and also a tribute to the bravery and heroism of Gen. Daniel Morgan of Revolutionary fame. Incidentally details are introduced relative to Washington and his generals, Benedict Arnold, Horatio Gates, and the various campaigns of this date, ending with the surrender at Yorktown. Originally published by A. S. Barnes & Co., 1881.

McConnell, Annie Bliss. Half married: a game gamé. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1887 [1886.] 311 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Bessie Lansing, the heroine, is the daughter of a West Point general of the old school. Upon leaving boarding-school she goes with her father to the far West and spends five years of her life among the soldiers of various border stations. Upon her father's death she comes East again and marries a good man, but finds him too much taken up with business to give her the devotion to which she had always been accustomed. Bessie is a fine character and the Western scenes are full of life and interest.

McCosh, Ja., D.D. Psychology: the cognitive powers. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 7-245 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

In preparing this text-book, Dr. McCosh has had the experience of thirty-five years as a teacher and student of mental science to draw from. He has endeavored, by many interesting illustrations taken from life, to avoid the condemnation "dull as a text-book" so often quoted. He says: "It will be shown in this work that the honest and careful study of the human mind in an inductive manner undermines the prevailing philosophic errors of this age; saves us from idealism on the one hand and agnosticism on the other; and conducts us to realism, which in a rude state was the first philosophy, and when its excrescences are pruned off will be the last."

"Unless Christian sentiment arrest it," says Dr. McCosh, "religion, without being noticed, will disappear from a number of our colleges—that is, from the education and training of many of our abler and promising young men." This is the key-note of his discourse.

MacCulloch, Hunter. From dawn to dusk, and other poems. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1887 [1886.] 134 p. por. S. cl., $1.25.

Upwards of one hundred short poems on every conceivable subject. The first twenty deal with the beginning of life, childhood, youth, manhood, womanhood, death, etc. Then come soliloquies of Socrates, Jephthah's daughter, Samson, Bacon, etc. Then many poems to the author's wife, and finally songs that have been set to music. A picture of the Sphinx adorns the title-page and outside cover.

Macdonald, G: What's mine's mine. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 531 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Two brothers, the last of a long line of Highland chiefs, are the heroes of this most fascinating tale. They are crowded out of their possessions by the new and rich owners of surrounding lands, and finally leave the land they have not money to hold. Oil is afterward discovered on the little estate to which they go, and their fortunes are growing at the close. This plot is used by the author with all his old skill, to teach lessons of love and goodness and purity. The love between the brothers is the key-note of the story.

The style of the work is clear ; difficulties are approached one step at a time, every lesson begins with examples, and works from them to the abstract rule or definition, and all examples are drawn from short stories taken from standard English writers By these means a most difficult study is made easy Even the pupil who has "hated" etymology is led along, interested and delighted by the new and wonderful things he learns, and, best of all, English studies at school are closely associated with English speech and writing at home in good books, on the play-ground, everywhere

Scene laid on the Nova Scotia coast near Halifax. An undisciplined, beautiful girl of generous impulses and brilliant intellect lives a lonely life with her grandmother, an original creation of modern fiction. Two lovers of strongly contrasting characters have a controlling influence on the life of the heroine The story is a powerful study of the inmost recesses of a woman's heart and mind. The title is taken from "Hamlet"

Mecklenburg is the scene of Leopold Uhlheim's tutorship to a young scion of a noble German house. The "voice" belongs to Elsa, the boy's sister. She is proud, and has vowed never to marry any one who is not of noble blood. There is but little plot, but the story gives a picture of domestic life in Germany, its small cares and prejudices that will be thoroughly enjoyed. Elsa is finally conquered by the tutor, as he has been by her magic voice

Mr. McLellan, the "poet-sportsman," was born at Portland, Maine, 1806. He counted Longfellow, Hawthorne, N. P. Willis, and other famous writers among his early friends and associates. He is an ardent devotee of field-sports, describing in very charming verse the delights of the chase, the larger game of America and Europe, the haunts of the wild-birds, and the various aspects of nature. These poems found a place in the best sporting journals of his early days, and he is still an occasional contributor to the Turf, Field and Farm, Forest and Stream, American Angler, and other periodicals. His poems, collected at the request of many friends and admirers, form in their present shape a unique volume.

Macquoid, Katharine S. Joan Wentworth. a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 219 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 98.) pap., 25 c.

Joan Wentworth appears at the age of twelve, a healthy, studious, passionate child. Her school-life; her admiration for her French teacher, and her longing to be praised by him, are admirably told. Reverses of fortune break up her comfortable home-life. Joan goes to a boarding-school in France. The friendships made there, the glimpses of French country life, the final reunion of the family, and the development of Joan into a talented author make a story true to nature and full of the author's knowledge of young girls' trials and longings.

Macquoid, Mrs. Kath. S. Marjorie, or, wild as a hawk: a novel. New ed., rev. by the author. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 82 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 528.) pap., 20c.

The prologue, in two chapters, shows first a South American scene and the parting between a very young man and the wife who has married him out of spite, because her love was set aside by Cuthbert Durnford, her cousin, to marry riches. The second chapter shows the English house of Cuthbert, where his wife is dying and telling her daughter that the curse of the Durnfords is sudden death, caused by ungoverned will and anger. The motherless girl, Marjorie, is the heroine. She learns discipline after many tribulations, and finally marries a man who is strong and helps her evade the curse of the Durnfords.

The author divides his book into six parts: Religion, the Bible, Theology, Anthropology, Demonology, and Christology, his object being to demonstrate the harmony of the truths of revealed religion with the clear, unbiassed working of man's reasoning faculties. A well-digested table of contents and a careful index of several hundred references give easy access to the nearly six hundred pages.

Macy, Jesse. Our government. how it grew, what it does, and how it does it. Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 11+238 p. D. cl., 88 c.

Aims to give a clear view of all our governmental institutions, and their relations to one another. It is chiefly peculiar in its way of doing this. The historical method is followed, and the growth of our institutions is briefly traced from "old Schleswick in Denmark"—where our ancestors lived in free towns and villages—through England, where wars and violence resulted in kings and lords, and where the old free institutions of town and shire gave birth to a free Parliament—to America, where the same institutions, transplanted and preserved, were finally united into free commonwealths, and the commonwealths into a national Republic. In treating of "Our government," attention is first called to local matters that can be explained and understood most readily. "Constitutions" come last, and are then fully explained. Summaries and suggestions, with helpful questions, are given to assist in the thorough mastery of the subject.

Of the many attractive women that have presided at the White House, none was more popular than beautiful "Dolly" Madison. Even to the present time she remains one of the most charming figures among American historic women. Her letters, written without the most remote idea of publication, are transcripts of her gentle, womanly nature, in times of no ordinary trial, and under circumstances that are exceptional with the majority of her sex. Besides throwing a new and pleasing light on many public events and persons of the time, and affording valuable information regarding social and political life, they abound in delightful feminine details referring to the fashions, toilets of special occasions, love affairs, marriages, etc. The editor links the letters together with a pleasant running narrative, whereby a complete history of Mrs. Madison's life is furnished from her earliest childhood until her death at an advanced age. Many facts and anecdotes, handed down by near relatives are also happily saved from oblivion, by the plan of the work

These essays are connected with studies to which the author has devoted much time and research. He claims that in "Prospects of popular government" he has shown "that as a matter of fact, popular government, since its reintroduction into the world, has proved itself to be extremely fragile;" that in the essay "Nature of democracy" he has given "some reasons for thinking that, in the extreme form to which it tends, it is, of all kinds of government, by far the most difficult." In the "Age of progress" he has argued "that the perpetual change which, as understood in modern times, it appears to demand, is not in harmony with the normal forces ruling human nature, and is apt therefore to lead to cruel disappointment or serious disaster." In the fourth essay he has examined and analyzed the Constitution of the United States, for the purpose of bringing out and emphasizing some of the facts he offers in argument

"A faithful picture of the impressions produced on the English aristocratic mind by modern socialism. One of the characters, Mr. Foreman, is a lightly disguised portrait of the English Socialist Hyndman, and the figure is painted in with vigorous lines and in almost lurid colors. He is permitted to advance the staple arguments of his class with freedom, tempered, it is true, by the superior knowledge of facts possessed by one of the Roman Catholic priests who occupy such influential positions in some of Disraeli's novels. This priest, Mr. Stanley, is certainly very cleverly drawn, and a quite attractive and estimable personage; a little too omniscient, but humanly defective in the arguments—intended to be crushing- with which he meets the philosophy of Mr. Humbert Spender (alias Mr. Herbert Spencer). Carew, the hero, is an aristocrat deeply touched by compassion for the lot of the majority. . . . There is a love story woven into the book, and it is told with so much tenderness and delicacy as to deserve hearty praise and admiration."—New York Tribune.

Manteuffel, Ursula Zöge von. Violetta: a romance: from the German by Mrs. A. L. Wister. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 3-368 p. D. cl., $1.25.

This novel is intended to illustrate the impracticability of living up to one's idiosyncracies and prejudices regardless of the feelings and principles of others, or the unforeseen combinations of circumstances. All the characters are well conceived and act their parts naturally. Violetta is the daughter of a successful opera singer who has married again into an aristocratic family and left the stage. She is dissatisfied with the quiet life of a German household, almost ruins her generous husband, and finally leaves him. Violetta remains with her stepfather and goes on the stage, to which she has a great distaste, to support him after he is stricken with paralysis. All ends happily. Mrs. Wister's translation, of course, reads like an original story.

While the author admits that there are several books which treat of words and their proper uses, he claims there are none which cover the field occupied by this volume. Besides the correction of faulty sentences, it strives to show the correct application of many words which are frequently misemployed, and calls attention to a number of familiar words often mispronounced. Every point on which a verdict has been rendered has been investigated, such authorities having been consulted as Alford's "Queen's English," Cobbett's "Grammar of the English language," Moon's "Bad English," Bain's "Grammar," Blair's "Rhetoric," Crabbe's "Synonyms," Roget's "Thesaurus," Ayres's "Orthoepist," and other works.

Marshall, Emma. No 13: or, the story of the lost vestal. N. Y., Cassell & Co.. [1886.] 3—250 p. D. cl., $1.

During the recent excavations in the Roman Forum fourteen statues of the vestals Maximæ, or chief priestesses of the Goddess Vesta, have been discovered. One bears only the inscription "Number XIII." The author tells an imaginary story of this lost vestal, and claims her name was not engraved because she became converted to Christianity and was thus punished. The time of the story is the beginning of the fourth century. The fearful persecutions of the early Christians in Britain and Rome are graphically described. An instructive and poetic novel.

Marshall, Mrs. Emma. Salome; or, let patience have her perfect work. N. Y., T: Nelson & Sons, 1886. 6-245 p. 1 il. D. cl., $1.

Salome is sixteen when the story opens. She is the eldest girl in a family of six young people, who have just lost their father, his death having been caused by the shock of discovering he is on the brink of financial ruin, through the failure of a large firm with which he had business dealings. The family are obliged to change their entire way of living, and go into lodgings in a neighboring town, where their father's brother lives, with his numerous boys and girls. The cousins are all well depicted, and their opposite characters brought out very well. Salome is the patient, cheerful spirit of the household, helping every one, and suffering continually from the selfishness of others. She is a bright, clever girl, with much talent as a writer, which bears fruit in a little book that is a decided financial success, and a great help to the embarrassed family.

Marshall, Emma. Under the Mendips: a tale. N. Y., E. P. Dutton & Co., [1886.] 4+420 p., il. D. cl., $1.25.

Life at Fair Acres Manor, an old English homestead nestling under the shelter of the Mendip Hills is beautifully sketched in the opening chapters. "Joyce," the pretty heroine, just budding into womanhood, her weak and extravagant brother "Melville," just home from Oxford, the little lame boy "Piers," Mrs. Falconer, the English mother, and the dogs "Nip" and "Pip," all unite to form a charming picture of rustic peace and happiness. The aged Hannah More is a conspicuous character in the tale, and the closing scenes are taken from the Bristol riots of the autumn of 1831. A healthy story for young girls, teaching an excellent lesson.

Marshall, W. V. Unfair distribution of earnings: the evil effects and the remedy. Oswego, Kan., W. V. Marshall, 1886. 2+280+3 p. D pap., 75 c.; cl., $1.50.

Mr. Marshall has written his work to prove "that unfair distribution of earnings is the true and only cause of over-production, industrial depression, and hard times." The primary agencies of unfair distribution, he considers, are unfair taxation and unfair exchange; while the remedy consists in the introduction of a fair system of taxation and the abolition of monopolies.

Marston, E: Frank's ranche; or, my holiday in the Rockies; being a contribution to the inquiry into what we are to do with our boys. [Anon.] Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 11+214 p. il. S. cl., $1.25.

The story of a young Englishman who, tired of a mercantile life, comes to this country and buys a farm in the Far West. The book is divided into two parts: in the first we get the story of Frank's experience in letters to his father; in the second the father becomes the narrator; having made up his mind to visit Frank, he writes home, telling just how he found everything. The narrative is a true one, being the experiences of the son of Mr. Edward Marston, the English publisher.

Martin, Mrs. Elizabeth Gilbert. Whom God hath joined: a novel. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. 2+387 p. S. (Leisure hour ser., no. 189.) cl., $1.

First appeared serially in the Catholic World. Its tendency is decidedly toward Catholicism. Kitty Danforth's life is traced from childhood to matrimony. As a girl of seven she is represented surrounded by the influence of the Methodist church, to which her mother and father belong. Her intellectual and religious development, increasing as they do with her growth, are pictured with remarkable intelligence and care. Arriving at maturity, she has not only ceased to be a Methodist, but has become almost an atheist. Louis Giddings, whom she loves and marries, is the indirect means of converting her to the Catholic church. In a crisis of their lives brought about by the crime of an unprincipled woman, the question of divorce comes up, and the views of the Catholic church on the subject are strongly presented.

Mason, Mrs. Clara Arthur. Etchings from two lands. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 179 p. 1 il. D. cl., $1.

Mrs. Mason, who is the well-known author of "The cherry blooms of Yeddo," was with her husband for many years a missionary in Japan, their mission field being Tokio, where she had excellent opportunities for studying the lives and characters of the people, and for the collection of material which she has made use of in this book. She not only relates her experiences as a missionary, but sketches very vividly and picturesquely the scenery of the country, its peculiarities in the way of trees, plants, and flowers, the streets of the cities, with their multitude of shops, tea-houses and bazaars; and, most interesting of all, the people themselves, their domestic habits, religious beliefs, industries and amusements. The book opens with several chapters descriptive of her early life in Maine.

"The chief object of these volumes is to amuse; but, perhaps, they may also help to illustrate some phases of American literature. Humor is certainly one of the strong characteristics of our literature; and the attempt has here been made to bring together, in an attractive form and within a moderate compass, some worthy examples of humorous writing, from the time of Irving to the present day."—Preface. Almost fifty authors are represented by stories, poems, or extracts from humorous essays. Dainty, attractive volumes printed uniform with "Prose masterpieces from modern essayists."

Fearful dreams and strange omens usher in a story full of a tragical interest. The scene is laid in Scotland. Two lost and belated travellers seek refuge at a lonely farm, and one is wakened by an unearthly knocking at his door. The family tell him that it is a family omen, presaging trouble to the one most dear to them directly or indirectly through him, and that it is always said to be heard on "the day the end begins." The mystery of the story beginning here, holds the reader's interest throughout, the gloom being somewhat lightened by a couple of love stories.

The following extract, taken from the author's introduction, further explains the object of his work: "In Christian lands little or no attention has been given to the philosophic character of Christianity, its defence being largely historical or in form theological; hence the philosophic thinker, finding his method abjured, has been led to conclude against the philosophical value of religion, and has pronounced it a superstition. To acquaint him with the primordial ideas of religion, vindicating them from the philosophical standpoint, and to re-impress the image of truth upon the mind of man, the mistakes of materialism, and the insufficiency and frigidity of a godless philosophy, and the deep, pervasive, and unquenchable spirit of Christianity, with the authority of its truths, and the sufficiency of its revelations, must be fully and comprehensively shown, and this is attempted in the volume here presented."

With this handsome volume is begun a new uniform edition of Meredith's novels, to be completed in nine volumes; they are neatly bound in smooth cloth, have uncut edges, and are well printed. Of this work the Boston Traveller says: "A novel of a very unusual character, and one which is calculated to arrest attention. There is a story, a plot, an effective development, a strong interest. Beyond this there is more. There is a deep and exhaustive study of character that is almost Shakespearian in its grasp. With this study of the individual character of Richard Feverel and his father, and the persons whose lives touch theirs and who make up the actors in the drama, there is also a study of the social world that is unique, penetrating, and brilliant."

Miller, Elvira Sydnor. Songs of the heart; with a prologue by Douglass Sherley. Louisville, Ky., J: P. Morton & Co., 1885. 19+144 p., S. cl., $1.00.

Miss Miller is a Louisville girl closely related to the family of Edgar Allan Poe. Of the fifty songs in this little book, Douglass Sherley says: "They may be touched with faults, as doubtless there are imperfections here and there of verse and meter; but in them all there is a sweet and tender flow of heart music; low, tremulous chords in a minor key, ready to charm away the evil spirit, if it be upon you"

Kathie was very sick one summer and after her strength returned her eyes were too weak to read or go to school. She grew fretful and depressed and tired of being read to. Her aunt proposes that Kathie shall dictate a story and that she shall write it for her. This story was entitled "Kathie's experience." It relates little events of her child-life and is interspersed with conversations that teach her many lessons.

Miller, Joaquin, [Cincinnatus Hiner Miller.] The destruction of Gotham. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886 214 p. D. cl., $1.

A story of New York at the present time; illustrates the struggles and temptations of the poor and the grasping avarice of the unscrupulous rich; begins with the coming of a beautiful country girl to the great city; describes her loneliness and poverty, and her final fall and abject misery. A painful story to read, and one that prophesies the worst for Gotham, as the conflict between labor and capital grows more bitter.

Miller, J. R., D.D. Silent times: a book to help in reading the Bible into life. Bost., T: Y. Crowell & Co., 1886. 266 p. D. cl., $1.25.

This work was begun in 1884, and will contain when completed 180 colored illustrations, and complete text of all the proven plants indigenous and naturalized in the United States, arranged generically when bound according to the numerical order of the plates. Most of the plants described in this work grow within the daily ride of country practitioners. The author has in every case drawn and colored the plants represented in this work by his own hand from the specimens as they stood in the soil; making mathematically accurate drawings and avoiding the misrepresentations of wilted individuals, or too highly colored fancy pictures. A glossary of botanical terms and complete index, together with a carefully arranged bibliography, will be added to the work.

Minto, W: The crack of doom: a novel. N. Y., Harper, [1886.] 78 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 530.) pap., 20 c.

"It may safely be said of a novel with a comet for hero that it inaugurates a new departure in fiction. Heterogeneous as is the human world dealt with in 'The crack of doom,' it all revolves around a certain comet whose flaunting tail threatens the earth with destruction. By aid of the comet the characters are paired comfortably off in the end; by aid of the comet the villains are killed off the moment they become as villains useless in the economy of the story; by aid of the comet the heroine comes at the end of the third volume into a fortune .... If the reader expects to draw a good deal of amusement from a story so quaintly conceived as this, he will not be disappointed. A fine vein of animal spirits runs through the whole, and even when a tragic thread is interwoven in the humorous structure, it remains still a comedy."—The Athenæum.

Mitchell, Elizabeth Harcourt. Engel, the fearless: a tale; il. by J. Nash. N. Y., E. & J. B. Young & Co., [1886.] 4-383 p. il. D. cl., $1.05.

Still another of the many tales written to make ancient history, manners, and customs real to young readers. Engel is a lovely woman who goes as attendant to a boy and girl kept shut up in an old baronial German castle by their savage uncle and his barbarous minions. She teaches them lessons of gentleness, truth, and honor, and develops them into noble manhood and womanhood. The time is the middle-ages. Engel turns out to be the children's mother.

Mitchell, J. A. The romance of the moon. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. No paging, obl. T. cl., $1.

Fourteen humorous pen-and-ink sketches reproduced on heavy paper in blue ink, with red titles; they tell the romantic tale of how the Moon was loved by the Earth and Saturn, who fought a duel about her, in which the latter was seriously beaten and hurled into space; and how the Sun also came wooing the Moon and was respectfully declined, but carried her off in his chariot by main force; and how it is only when the Sun is sleeping that she steals away to see her lover and sheds the tears which men call dew. Mr. Mitchell has been led to publish these facts to dispel the "wide-spread and lamentable ignorance concerning all that pertains to the romantic side of earth's history."

The writer started from Bengal on a missionary trip through the Presidency of Madras, visiting all the principal stations and meeting with warm welcome everywhere. The book gives a good picture of the momentous changes which are at present going on in the social, religious, and political life of England's vast dependency

Family life in the East and the peculiar position of Indian women receive special attention. There is a good map and about twenty illustrations make the interesting text still clearer.

Mitchell, S. Weir, M.D. Roland Blake. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 2+379 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A story of the Rebellion. Opens in May, 1864, and gives a graphic picture of the last year of the great war. The plot is slight. Darnell, the rebel spy, and his hysterical sister are excellent characters Ronald Blake is a manly gentleman. The author of "In war-time" has once more written an historical novel that will interest, and has avoided partisanship.

The story of a faithful nurse; tells how she loyally carried out a trust confided to her Death carries off all the members of the family she is serving but one little girl. This child, if it lives, will one day inherit a great fortune. It stands between the fortune and a wicked relative who is its guardian, and who plots to end its life. The way in which Avice Bligh frustrates this man's purpose, saves her nursling, and obtains for her at last her money and true position in the world, is both sad and thrilling.

Molinos, Miguel de. The spiritual guide which disentangles the soul, and brings it by the inward way to the getting of perfect contemplation and the rich treasure of internal peace; tr. from the Italian. Verbatim reprint of the edition of 1699. Phil., G. W. McCalla, 813 Arch St., 1885. 4+159 p. T. cl., 75 c.

Molinos was of a noble Spanish family of Minozzi, in the diocese of Saragossa, in Aragon, where he was born Dec. 21, 1627. After a career of some distinction in his own country he went to Rome, where he speedily acquired a wonderful popularity as a spiritual director. In 1675 he published in Rome, in Italian, this little book, "Il Guida Spirituale," which was afterward (1676) published in Spanish at Madrid, then at Saragossa in 1677, and then in Seville in 1685. This work went through twenty editions in different languages in the space of six years, 1675–1681. Molinos taught in this little book of devotion the doctrines of passivity, designed to show how inward peace may be found by contemplation, prayer, obedience, and inward mortification rather than by external demonstration. Though at first courted and honored, he was arrested in 1685 by the Inquisition, and spent the end of his life, it is supposed, in imprisonment. This issue is reprinted from an English translation which appeared in 1699, without any publisher's imprint or even the place of its publication.

Montague, C: Howard. The romance of the lilies. Bost., W. I. Harris & Co., 1886. 214 p. D. pap., 50 c.

One night, in an obscure village on the coast of Maine, the pure young wife of an absent sea-captain is startled by the appearance of an erring schoolmate, who, having deserted her home two years before, now returns repentant to find the doors of her father's house closed against her. She comes to the home of her old playmate to die. Through the shock of this sad event, the daughter of the good woman is born with the face of her unfortunate friend. On this curious assumption Mr. Montague has built up a charming story. The central character is the young girl, herself an embodiment of innocence and light-hearted joy, destined to play a strange part, unconsciously, by reason of her novel inheritance. By the author of "Two strokes of the bell."

Montague, C: Howard. Two strokes of the bell: a strange story. Bost., W. I. Harris & Co., 1886. 3–185 p. D. cl., $1; flex. cl., 50 c.; pap., 25 c.

This first issue of a new Boston publishing firm is creditable both typographically and from a literary standpoint. The author, who for some years has been on the staff of the Boston Daily Globe, has produced a story full of incident, and somewhat on the sensational order. The hero, after a severe illness, awakes in a place unfamiliar to him, in the northern part of New York State, to find his memory gone and his mind haunted by the echoes of a clock striking the hour of two.

John Ramsey, an eminent lawyer, who has lived to be fifty-nine with no thought beyond making and keeping money, is ordered by his physician to go to his old family mansion in some pretty English borough and do nothing for some weeks. On his arrival he is informed by the housekeeper that his brother, the village clergyman, is lying at death's door with scarlet fever, and that his little boy has been sent to her to be taken care of. The three weeks John Ramsey spends in the companionship of this delightfully described child bear lasting fruit, and he is "transformed" from a hard, selfish money-maker, into a generous brother and wise landlord. Twelve pages of brightly colored designs illustrating the familiar poem, "'Twas the night before Christmas." The text is printed in brown ink and the book in a brilliant lithographed cover, with a design of St. Nicholas driving through the clouds.

Moore, Frank, ed. Songs and ballads of the Southern people, 1861-1865. N. Y. Appleton, 1886. 324 p. S. cl., $1.

Gathered from Southern magazines and papers; the collection was made with the view of preserving in permanent form the opinions and sentiments of the Southern people, as embodied in their songs and ballads of 1861-1865. The historical value of the compilation is undisputed, while many of the songs are charming productions, in spite of their sentiments. Index

Dr. Moore, of the Lenox Library, describes in this second paper the principal events which took place within the walls of the old Boston State House between the years 1776 and 1830, the most interesting being the visits of Washington in 1789 and of Lafayette in 1825, and the meetings of the various constitutional conventions. In an appendix he discusses the use of the words Colony, Province, and State as applied to Massachusetts, and gives an account, with contemporaneous documents, of the controversy in 1802 between the State and the town as to the ownership of the building. Considerable space is also given to the difference of opinion between himself and Mr. Wm. H. Whitmore as to the original internal arrangement of the old building.

Moore, Helen. Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 4-346 p. S. cl., $1.25.

Strange to say, this is the first life that has been written of the wife of Percy Bysshe Shelley, and the daughter of William Godwin and Mary Wollstonecraft. Not only her influence on Shelley's life and genius, but her own vigorous intellect and individuality, entitle her to a place among eminent literary women. "Frankenstein" alone gave her a world-wide reputation; but she wrote many other works of value and importance. Her romantic life is ably told from childhood until her death in 1851; connected with it we get many interesting details of her famous parents and husband. The writer's style is warmly appreciative and very interesting Morrill, Justin S., comp. Self-consciousness of noted persons; compiled in leisure hours. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 15+187 p. O. cl., $1.50.

Justin S. Morrill was United States Senator from Vermont. He was first a merchant, then a farmer, and in 1855 became a member of Congress. During his leisure hours he read much and always kept a scrap-book. The present volume is made up of extracts collected during many years, all bearing upon the estimate great men have put upon themselves. The author makes a nice distinction between self-consciousness and vanity. The book is an interesting collection of such revelations. Beginning with St. Paul it comes down to the present day. Writers preponderate, but workers in other fields are fairly represented. The noted persons, 171 in number, are chiefly English, many Americans, with some Frenchmen, Romans, Russians, and Greeks The book is a literary curiosity of permanent value

Extracts from the writings of Motley, Prescott, Bryant, Holmes, Parkman, Howells Lowell, Whittier, Aldrich, Bret Harte, Hawthorne, Curtis, Longfellow, Irving, Willis, Bancroft, Channing, Mrs. Whitney, Mrs. Burnett, and many others. Intended for the general reader. Technical subjects have been avoided. A biographical sketch precedes the writings of each author. Excellent subject and title indexes.

Morris, E: E. The early Hanoverians. N. Y., C Scribner's Sons, 1886. 21+235 p. maps and tables, S. (Epochs of modern history.) cl., $1

Though the name of this volume is taken from English history, it is, like others of the series, largely devoted to continental affairs of the period (1713 to 1755), such as the Turkish wars, the Polish succession war, Anson's voyage. It opens with a general survey of the principal European powers after the Peace of Utrecht, and some biographical details of leading men. The third and concluding book gives an excellent summary of the religious and literary features of England and France during the period the volume covers.

Mournful ballad (The) of Isaac Abbott. Cin., Rob. Clarke & Co., 1886. No paging, il. sq. D. pap., $1.

For more than a hundred years the ballad and the air of this relic of the simple country life of New England luring the eighteenth century have been handed down from father to son by tradition alone. To preserve it, Mr E. P. Cranch has issued it in its present form. The original air appears first, then the ballad comes, with original illustrations by Mr. Cranch. Printed only on one side of the paper; fastened with a ribbon. Altogether quaint and amusing.

Marcella Grace was the daughter of an old Irish poplin-weaver. Her mother was a lady and her father was ambitious for her. Inadvertently she becomes the means of saving an Irish gentleman, whom circumstantial evidence has proved guilty of conspiracy with Fenians. The trial, imprisonment, reprieve, and final release of this man, who has become her husband meanwhile, make a readable story of Irish life of the present day.

The author has aimed to show his readers the place held by tapestry in the annals of high art or painting proper. Beginning with an account of tapestry in ancient times with the Egyptians, Assyrians, Hebrews, Chinese, Greeks, Romans, etc., it goes on through the various centuries, describing textile art as found in different countries, and illustrating the account very profusely. The last chapter describes some of the looms now used in weaving tapestries. In the appendix are fac-similes of the marks and monograms by which the makers are known, and lists of the chief centres of manufacture, of painters who designed cartoons for tapestries, and of the chief tapestry workers.

Murfree, Mary N., ["Charles Egbert Craddock," pseud.] In the clouds. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1887 [1886.] 2+452 p. S. cl., $1.25.

Like Miss Murfree's previous novels, this is a story of the Tennessee mountains, rich in quaint character sketches and descriptions of the romantic scenery. It is in the main a love tale, but there is a good deal about illicit whiskey distilling, while an account of a trial by jury covers many pages. The story has been running through the Atlantic Monthly during the present year.

The scene is laid in Heydon Hay; through the meetings of its musical quartette much is learned of the local gossip and an interest awakened in the growing attachment between Ruth Fuller, the village beauty, and Reuben Gold. This courtship is somewhat hindered by the vigilance of Aunt Rachel, but her plan to separate the lovers is unsuccessful, for they not only finally adjust their own affairs satisfactorily, but effect a reconcilliation between Aunt Rachel and her old lover, Ezra Gold.

Murray, D. Christie. Cynic fortune: a tale of a man with a conscience. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 132 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 81.) pap., 25 c.

A murder committed in Paris under peculiar circumstances is the key-note. The murderer comes to England and takes possession of his cousin's property, living for nearly twelve years unsuspected of his crime, leading an apparently peaceful, happy life. At the end of this time, a man who had witnessed the murder, himself unseen, is freed from the galleys, where he had been serving a term for burglary. His efforts to extort money from "the man with a conscience" by trading upon his knowledge bring about some strange combinations of circumstances, which introduce many odd characters.

Murray, J. E. Advanced lessons in English composition, analysis, and grammar. Phil., J: E. Potter & Co, [1886.] 2+384 p. S. (Murray's language ser., no. 2.) cl., 90 c.

Companion volume to "Essential lessons," completing the language series. The new and practical features of this book claim the attention of all leading educators. Composition, analysis, and grammar are taught together, which seems to be the natural method of treating the English language.

Murray, J. E. Essential lessons in English composition, analysis, and grammar. Phil., J: E. Potter & Co., [1886.] 2+226 p. S. (Murray's language ser., book 1.) cl., 75 c.

The first of a series of two books, one elementary and one advanced, in which composition, analysis, and grammar are taught together. The series has been prepared "with the hope," Mr. Murray says, "that it will meet the approbation of those teachers who desire the best methods in the science of teaching, combined with the true principles of English as established by comparative grammar."

Murrey, T: J. The book of entrées. N. Y. White, Stokes & Allen. 1886. 83 p. T. bds., 50 c.; cl., 75 c.

Upwards of one hundred and twenty-five recipes for entrées, suitable dinners, lunches, late breakfasts, etc. Mr. Murrey says that much care and ingenuity should be shown in the arranging of entrées on the platter, and suggests many ways of serving and garnishing. What are known as entrées are dainty side-dishes in which cooks may specially demonstrate their invention and capacity. They must appeal to the eye as well as to the palate.

Murrey, T: J. Puddings and dainty desserts. N. Y., White, Stokes & Allen, 1886. 53 p. T. bds., 50 c.; cl., 75 c.

Nearly one hundred recipes of most delightful combinations of fruits, pastes, and creams, and other "ethereal trifles" are embraced in this dainty little book. Housekeepers will find it a source of many pleasant surprises for their guests, and will have no trouble in consulting it, as it is alphabetically arranged under subjects. The book is issued in the attractive style of the author's "Fifty soups" and "Fifty salads."

Myers, P. V. N. Outlines of mediæval and modern history: a text-book for high schools, seminaries, and colleges. Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 11+740 p. maps, D. cl., $1.65.

A continuation of the author's "Outlines of ancient history," although intended for pupils of somewhat maturer minds. Aims to blend in a single narrative accounts of the social, political, literary, intellectual, and religious developments of the peoples of mediæval and modern times — to give in simple outline the story of civilization since the meeting in the fifth century of Latin and Teuton upon the soil of the Western Roman Empire. It deals with the essential, not the accidental features of the life of the race, hence gives prominence to the virtues rather than the vices of man. The style is condensed and suggestive, there is a good index, plenty of maps, and the book is very nicely gotten up.

Newcomb, Simon. A plain man's talk on the labor question. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 3-195 p. S. cl., 60 c.

The chapters of which this work is composed first appeared in outline in the New York Independent. As now given they are recast and amplified. The work is divided into three parts: "Society and its wants," Capital and its uses, and "The laborer and his wages." The author, who has made a life-long study of these question, endeavors to trace the relations between great operations of commerce and industry on the one side, and of human welfare on the other, and while he talks entirely in the interest of the laborers, he tells plain truths to both capitalists and laborers.

Newton, R:, D.D. Bible warnings: sermons to children. N. Y., Rob. Carter & Bros., [1886.] 3-384 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Fifteen sermons for children. Dr. Newton explains that trains are warned of danger by bells, flags, and signals, and he takes fifteen Bible texts, which he calls the bells and signals given to warn against covetousness, intemperance, lying, sin, anger, pride, disobedience, selfishness, sloth, etc., so that dangers may be recognized and young lives be brought through them safely. The special talent at pointed fascinating illustration for which this Philadelphia preacher is celebrated is once more brought into play.

Noble, Annette L. Dave Marquand. N. Y., National Temp. Soc. and Pub. House, 1886. 357 p. 1 il. D. cl., $1.25.

David Marquand's father was a Jew, though his mother had been born a Christian; on her death Levi Marquand marries again, giving little Davie a coarse, unscrupulous Jewish woman for a stepmother; she treats him so badly that he runs away, and after many vicissitudes finds himself in a Western city, the story having opened in New York. He is converted to Christianity, becomes a temperance lecturer after growing to manhood, and is a well-educated, attractive young fellow, his education having been gained by his own efforts and industry. Although his father has cast him off, his fortune finally reverts to him, his stepmother making a death-bed confession of the wrong she has done him; and he marries the girl of his choice.

Noble, Annette Lucile. The professor's girls. Phil., Presb. Bd. of Pub., [1886] 384 p. 1 il. S. cl., $1.25.

Professor Gray is principal of a New England village academy. Madge and Ruth, his daughters, are the "girls." Ruth studies too much, and is sent to Europe with friends to regain her strength. Her letters, in the form of a journal, describe her European travels. Madge stays at home, and longs for something to happen. The characters of the old grandmother, the mother, the servant, and the ten-year-old brother are excellently drawn. Miss Noble understands the faults, follies, and peculiar trials and temptations of very young girls.

Noel, Maurice. Buz; or, the life and adventures of a honey-bee. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. 5-134 p. S. cl., $1.

In the form of a delightfully told little story, the author describes the habits of bees with a view to leading young people to study for themselves the lives of these wonderful little animals. The book looks attractive, with its initial letters of bees, comb, and honey in all varieties of combination, its clear print, short paragraphs, and bright red cover with design of bees and honey-comb in black, and large gilt title.

Norris, Mary Harriott. Dorothy Delafield. N. Y., Phillips & Hunt, 1886. 2-430 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The story of a young American girl, who is left just as she is growing into womanhood to struggle alone with the world. As her youth has been an exceptional one in its education and influences, she has thoughts and theories different from the ordinary woman. She had gone through the slavery struggle, and aided her father in helping Southern slaves escape by the "underground railroad." She had ideas instilled into her regarding business and monopolies—the little town, Quincy, in which she had grown up, having been the centre of a manufacturing interest, owned entirely by a combination of capitalists. She tries various methods to earn her living—experimenting as a lecturer, reporter, editor, etc.

Norris, W: E. A bachelor's blunder. a novel. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. 369 p. O. pap., 50 c.

The story of a young English girl who believes she has in her the making of a great artist. She begins life as a great heiress pursuing art as a pastime, but her father's death and the failure of a bank throw her upon her uncle's kindness for a home. In spite of his sincere affection for her, she longs for independence, and obtains his permission to go to London, and pursue the profession she loves under the protection of her old nurse. Her career and struggle are full of interest and teach some practical lessons. Wilfrid Tristram, the Royal Academician, who permits her to study in his studio, is evidently a picture from life, it is so full of delicate lines and details. When it is forced upon Hope at last that she is not the possessor of genius, and can scarcely ever expect to live by her pictures, she accepts the only alternative the author seems to think open to a woman under the circumstances—marriage.

Norris, W: E. Her own doing: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 137 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 80.) pap., 25 c.

All turns upon the fact of a wealthy young widow engaging herself, through pique chiefly, to a dashing young man of whom her relatives do not approve. The scene is laid at Cannes, the characters, however, being mostly English. The dashing young man is proved to be an impostor and a thief in quite a dramatic scene, which brings the story to a close.

Norris, W: E. My friend Jim. N. Y., Macmillan, 1886. 223 p. D. (Macmillan's summer reading ser.) pap., 50 c.

A cynical story of London life, which recalls Thackeray more than any previous novel of Mr. Norris. "Jim" is a big soft-hearted fellow, who trusts every one, and is basely betrayed by the woman he loves. This woman, Hilda Turner, is of the Becky Sharp order of women, and Lord Bracknell, the man she finally captures, will irresistibly recall Rawdon Crawley, even in the deep love he shows for his little boy. The man represented as telling the story is full of worldly wit and quiet humor.

Oliphant, Mrs. Marg. O. W. A country gentleman: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 77 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 507.) pap., 20 c.

In this novel Mrs. Oliphant approaches so near to Trollope's methods of composition that one might suppose she had been making him a study. The trivialities and commonplaces of life are dwelt on, to the exclusion of grand motives or great passions. The "country gentleman," Theodore Warrender, is only seen under one very strong influence—and that is his love for a lady his superior in social position, and his senior in years. He finally wins her against her better judgment. She is a widow with a young son, who becomes a bone of contention with the mismated couple. Warrender's mother, sister, and friends all play chorus to his affairs, when not taken up with their own petty miseries.

Oliphant, Mrs. Marg. O. W. A house divided against itself: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 82 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 511.) pap., 20c.

Frances Waring and her father had lived abroad all her short life; at eighteen she becomes the heroine of a story, and is described as an innocent, pretty, unconventional girl, who knows nothing of herself or family save the fact that she had been born in England. She is residing with her father in an out-of-the-way Italian town, when by chance she learns that she has a mother and brother and sister living. Her parents, she discovers, have been separated for years, her mother being a woman of rank, who had married somewhat beneath her. Frances' meeting with the other half of the family, her sister's and her own love affairs and other little domestic incidents make up the story

O'Meara, Kathleen. Madame Mohl : her salon and her friends ; a study of social life in Paris. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 5+317 p. por. D. cl., $2.50.

From the appearance of the first chapter of these charming reminiscences in the Atlantic Monthly they attracted attention. The subject was not only one of exceeding interest, but was treated with so much grace and spirit, as to make every succeeding portion eagerly looked for. Madame Mohl, born plain Mary Clarke, held her salon in Paris for the greater part of a century ; she lived to be nearly a hundred, and made her social début when little more than a child. She started out in life with the avowed purpose of making herself pleasing to all she came in contact with, and through this powerful adjunct to her many mental gifts and acquirements succeeded in winning the regard of most of the great people of her day. Political, literary, dramatic, and social stars crowded her drawing-room in the Rue du Bac, making material for this delightful work, written by a sincere admirer. Anecdotes and personal details of famous men and women enrich every page.

"Here, as in the earlier volumes of poetry the author has given to the world, the first things that strike the reader are the freedom from affectation, the frankness of the utterances, and the terse and spirited diction that characterize Mr. O'Reilly's verse. He has aimed at higher flights than he has taken in this little volume, but he has not written anything that is more genuine poetry than are some of the shorter poems he has here sent forth. There are manly protests against wrong and sympathy with suffering uttered in vigorous tones and in language of which every word tells. . . . Upon all, however, the poet has set the seal of his strong individuality, and he is always picturesque, suggestive, and imaginative. Most if not all that is contained in this volume has appeared before in print."—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

Paget, Miss Violet, ["Vernon Lee," pseud.] Baldwin: being dialogues on views and aspirations. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 4+375 p. D. cl., $2.
The volume comprises six dialogues or essays with the following titles: "The responsibilities of unbelief," "The consolations of belief," "Of honor and evolution," "Of novels," "The value of the ideal," and "Of doubts and pessimism." "Baldwin" is the chief speaker, figuring in all the discussions; the introduction gives the reader to understand that he is not a strictly actual creature, nor one wholly of the imagination. He is an agnostic, as is "Vere" and "Rheinhardt," two others who take part in the talk. The opposite sides are upheld by "Agatha," a deist, "Michael," an Oxford undergraduate, Mrs. Blake, an English novelist, "Marcel," a critic, and several others. The opinions expressed are independent and liberal to a degree, while the whole volume evinces remarkable culture for so young a writer.

Painter, F. V. N. A history of education. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 16+335 p. D. (International education ser., ed. by W. T. Harris, no. 2.) cl., $1.50.
The history of education, viewed from the standpoint of the philosophy of history, has been traced in its relations with the social, political, and religious conditions of each country. While the results of French and German scholarship in this field have been utilized, the original sources of information, whenever accessible, have been consulted. As far as was consistent with the limits of the volume, the great teachers of all ages have been allowed to speak for themselves. Avoiding such matters of detail as serve only to confuse and oppress the memory, the author has endeavored to present clearly the leading characteristics of each period, and the labors and distinctive principles of prominent educators. Considerable prominence has been given to Comenius, Pestalozzi, Froebel, and other educational reformers. The second volume of a new series designed to embrace new works of a practical character for teachers and school managers, and text-books for normal classes

Panton, J. E. Dear life. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 207 p. D. pap., 25 c.
Based on an event of the Indian mutiny. Lady Manners, who had for twenty years been supposed to have been a victim of that terrible slaughter, returns to her native village just on the day of her husband's funeral, who had lived true to her memory till his death. She refuses at first to explain her past, but finally says she had been held a prisoner in the Rajah's palace, to minister to the women of his harem, and that she had been made believe all he longing to her had been murdered. Escaping with the aid of a missionary, she had come back to England to find her husband had lived through the twenty years, and that her child was a young lady. She is still an attractive woman, though a very selfish one. An admirer of her youth renewing his suit, the question of her past comes up again. A jealous woman unearths her secret, and a number of unusual and tragical events carries the story on to its sad ending.

Paris, Comte de. The battle of Gettysburg: from the "History of the civil war in America." Published by special arrangement with the author. Phil., Porter & Coates, [1886.] 9+315 p. maps, O. cl., $1.50.
The account of the battle of Gettysburg occupies three chapters in the third volume of the Comte de Paris' "History of the civil war in America," and is acknowledged to be the fairest and most graphic description of the battle ever written, and in response to numerous demands is now published separately. To make the work still more complete, an itinerary of the Army of the Potomac and co-operating forces in the Gettysburg campaign, June and July, 1863, which was a feature in the appendix to the first edition of the Comte's great work, has been carefully revised and enlarged from documents in the possession of the War Department, giving the most complete organization of the Army of the Potomac, and detailing the name of every general and subordinate commander on the field, with a return showing the casualties by regiment and battery in the Union and Confederate armies, July 1-3, 1863, giving to this book an official character possessed by none other relating to the battle.

Traces the Marshalls from the myths and legends of past generations down to the birth of the last child. Also gives the histories of a number of families that intermarried with the Marshalls. The chart is an ingenious scheme. About eleven hundred names are arranged as radii issuing from the central and original pair, in six concentric circles, or generations; and every individual is numbered and indexed so as to be conveniently found. The whole Marshall family, except the seventh generation of infants, appears at one view, and any member may trace his ancestry or his posterity with facility.

Payn, Ja. The heir of the ages: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 91 p. il. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 531.) pap., 25 c.
Elizabeth Dart, the heroine, is a talented and charming young governess. Her first situation is in an apparently wealthy family, where she is to be companion to a young girl very near her own age. She finds all kinds of family complications and troubles caused by the heir's extravagance and the attempt to force the daughter to marry a man abhorrent to her, simply for his fortune. The story is one of home entirely, dealing with simple joys and pleasures, and commonplace troubles; but Mr. Payn imparts to it the interest he has infused into many previous tales. Miss Dart becomes a great novelist in time, and her experience in the great literary world of London is pictured from life. A little bit of antiquarian romance, well-told, is the excuse for the title.

Pearson, G: Cullen. Flights inside and outside Paradise, by a penitent peri. N Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons. 1886. 18 389 p D. cl., $1.25.

This brisk description of excursions in Japan, Italy, and Turkey, with memories of happy hours of companionship with friends, to whom the author dedicates his work, is most suitable to pick up for an hour's reading here and there on quiet afternoons. Men, to whom so few books of the kind appeal, will find nothing dull in the racy language of the author, who invariably calls a spade a spade. The cover is odd, being of dark brown sateen with hieroglyphics such as are seen on tea-chests.

Pearson, H: Clemens. His opportunity. N. Y., Ward & Drummond 1886. 3-447 p. D. cl., $1 50.

The hero of this story is left a fortune under a peculiar condition. His uncle, who has made his money in a file factory, where his operatives have been treated as slaves, and their moral and social condition entirely ignored outside the factory, leaves his business to Tom Chamberlain, on condition that he serves for two years in the factory as a common workingman, thus learning the business and the condition of factory hands; for the latter his uncle asks his nephew to do what he should have done—rescue them from the dram shops and the inevitable perdition they are drifting toward. Chamberlain carries out his uncle's request, and the end of the story finds "Steelville" a very different place from what it was at the beginning.

A collection of between eighty and ninety lyrical pieces Mr Peck is a Southern poet of decided talent, and his poems are bright and full of graceful fancies and pretty interpretations of nature's various moods. The volume is published in the exquisite style that characterizes its publishers, who seem untiring in their efforts to furnish dainty fancies in type and binding.

Peirce, B. O. Elements of the theory of the Newtonian potential function. Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 10+143 p. il. O. cl., $1.

Made up from lecture-notes that Prof. Peirce, of Harvard, wrote out during the past four years for the use of students, who had begun to study with him what he says, "I have ventured to call, after Neumann, the Newtonian potential function." The notes were intended for readers somewhat familiar with the principles of the differential and integral calculus, but unacquainted with many of the methods commonly used in applying mathematics to the study of physical problems. A list of books are given for the reader or student who wishes to get a thorough knowledge of the properties of the Newtonian potential function and of its application to problems in electricity.

Pendleton, Edmund. A conventional Bohemian. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 372 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Mrs. Frère, a young widow of twenty-eight, is the most charming but not the most conspicuous heroine of this slightly involved story She shares the interest with Angèle Ventworth, a fine piece of character drawing on the author's part, but a very unlovable woman. The title is impossible to define within our limits. The many characters are of the non-working class, with plenty of means. They run to and fro from Europe, with little side trips to Mexico, seaside and mountain resorts, with total disregard to money or home duties. The conversation is often very good.

Contains outlines of seventy-five sermons. The selection covers a variety of topics; some of the notes are more full, some merely outlines of his plan. If they are studied as examples of the mode of analyzing and presenting Scriptural themes their usefulness cannot be doubted.

Pennell, Jos. and Elizabeth Robins. Two pilgrims' progress. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1887 [1886.] 2+181 p. il. D. cl., $2.

A charming description of the events of a ride made on a tricycle by Mr. and Mrs. Pennell "from fair Florence to the eternal city of Rome." They saw more than average travellers do of the people and their simple lives and the lovely scenery. All this is depicted in a most graphic manner both with pen and pencil. Mr. Pennell furnishing a number of sketches from life. Mr. Charles Godfrey Leland, to whom the book is dedicated, furnishes "a friend's apology for this book," in verse; a second title-page is given in imitation of the "Pilgrim's Progress," and the chapters are headed by extracts from that book.

Perkins, Ja. Breck. France under Mazarin, with a review of the administration of Richelieu. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 2 v. 14+483; 11+510 p. pors. O. cl., $5.

"The period covered by the administrations of Richelieu and Mazarin is one of both interest and importance. Yet I am not aware that any full history of this time has been written in English. The career and character of Richelieu are, to a certain extent, familiar, but, perhaps, most have a general idea of his administration rather than a familiarity with what he actually did. Both the character and administration of Mazarin are, I think, little known to most English readers. Yet eighteen years which embraced the Fronde and the treaties of Westphalia and the Pyrenees cannot be deemed unimportant. The accuracy of modern scholarship demands, also, the examination of authorities which, until recently, have been largely inaccessible and wholly disregarded. There are a great number of contemporary memoirs covering this time. Many of the leading political characters have left their own records of their careers."—Author's Preface.

Perkins, Peppermint, [pseud.] The familiar letters of Peppermint Perkins. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 411 p. il. S. cl., $1; pap., 50 c.

Reprinted from the Boston Saturday Evening Gazette, for which paper they were written. "Peppermint Perkins" is said to be the nom de plume of a young society lady of Boston, who in a series of letters to her friend, Poesie Plympton, at Venice, castigates the weaknesses and frivolities of her friends and acquaintances. The style is both undignified and slangy, but the matter is undeniably clever and amusing.

Perkins, Mrs. Sarah M. Helen; or, will she save him? N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 3-138 p. D. cl., 75 c.; pap., 15 c.

Helen marries a man who drinks occasionally to excess; but as they love each other warmly, she believes she can reform him. Her experience, however, is most bitter; he goes from bad to worse, till she is forced to leave him and battle alone with the world. After years of degradation the husband is reclaimed through the Christian efforts of a college classmate, and restored to his family. The story claims to illustrate the utter impotency of all human influence and endeavor to save the confirmed drunkard.

A clear and connected narrative of the religious and ecclesiastical changes through which the church of England passed in the sixteenth century.

Perry, Nora. New songs and ballads. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 3-196 p. S. cl., $1.50.

About fifty poems on a wide range of subjects, all musically and gracefully treated in the happy style of the author of "After the ball," "For a woman," etc. Some have appeared in the periodicals of the day, but the larger part of them are now published for the first time. Neatly gotten up with title in red and black, gilt edges, etc

Perry, T: Sergeant. The evolution of the snob. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 2+186 p. S. cl., $1.

Thackeray's "Book of snobs" furnishes the text for this thoroughly English dissertation. The different social and political conditions that produce a snob are detailed with spirit and much knowledge of human nature and worldly wisdom. The tone is humorous, but there is much information in the pages.

Peters, W: Theodore. The children of the week; being the honest and only authentic account of certain stories, as related by the red Indian to Alexander Selkirk, jr., herein truthfully set down by W: T. Peters, with pictures thereunto by Clinton Peters. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1886. 161 p. sq. O. cl., $2.50.

Alexander Selkirk, jr., is a little lonely lame boy, who excites the sympathy of a kind-hearted shop-girl who passes his house every day. She brings him various little gifts, and her imagination bestows upon him his familiar name. On Christmas day she presents him with a penny, and it is the "Red Indian" on the coin who relates to him during the ensuing week the seven stories contained in this handsome volume. The illustrations are so numerous and the type so bold and large, and so much generosity has been displayed in the make-up of the book in the way of margins, that the stories are not so long as the size of the book would lead one to suppose. The cover has a rich and striking Japanese design, flying cranes in gold on black cloth.

Peyrebrune, Georges de. Les frères Colombe. N. Y., W: R. Jenkins, 1886. 136 p. S. (Contes choisis, no. 9.) pap., 25 c.

An exquisitely humorous and pathetic story of two old bachelors, who keep up a petit menage in Paris, and who, by adopting a little girl they have befriended, are subjected to all manner of perplexities and troubles in bringing her up.

Reprinted from the Andover Review and other periodicals. The essays represent the traditional theology of New England Congregationalism. "My study" deals with its interest in missions, journalism, temperance, and homely piety. From 1848 to 1879 the author was Professor of Sacred Rhetoric at Andover Seminary. A large number of the essays are devoted to doctrinal questions, much space being given to the subjects of probation after death and future retribution, on which questions Dr. Phelps's ideas do not at all agree with those of the present editors of the Andover Review.

Phelps, Elizabeth Stuart. Burglars in Paradise. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 2–220 p. S. (Riverside paper ser., no. 14.) pap., 50 c.

The first issue of this series for the summer of 1886. It continues the story of Corona, Puella Virginia, and the dog Matthew Launcelot, begun in "The old maid's paradise." The trio come again to Fairharbor for the summer, their little adventures and experiences being described in a most humorous way. Corona's experience in buying a horse, and the imaginary and real experiences with burglars, and the attempt to regain the stolen bond, are extremely funny.

Phelps, Elizabeth Stuart. The madonna of the tubs: il. by Ross Turner and G: H. Clements. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1887 [1886.] 4+94 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The chief charm of the story is its unpretentiousness; the scene is laid in a New England fishing village; the principal character is Ellen Jane Salt, who eks out a scanty livelihood by washing for the summer boarders of Fairharbor; Helen Ritter, watching her at this ceaseless toil and ministry over her crippled child, noting as well Raffé's surroundings, gives Ellen Jane the fitting appellation, "The madonna of the tubs." The characters are all very clearly defined. Helen Ritter is charming in her rôle of patroness to the Salt family; Henry Salt is a typical New England fisherman, with a brood of ruggedc children, and one little suffering lad who claims the love of everybody; while Ellen Jane's loving care over all gives her the beauty of a madonna.

The subjects of these nine sermons are, "Sojourning and its perils," "Pilate's question—Ours," "Our great refuge," "The tearless land," "Christ alone," "The Lord our home," "Opposite sides of the pillar of cloud and fire," "The call and the response," "Christ's work for the human race."

Phillips, W: A. Labor, land, and law: a search for the missing wealth of the working poor. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 13+471 p. O. cl., $2.50.

"Care has been taken to present, in as readable shape as possible, a large part of what is known of the various kinds of land tenure among men. The effects of the different forms of landholding on the industrial interests have been traced, and also the origin and growth of many of those individual and family rights which have left their marks on our social system. Slavery, vassalage, serfdom, and the various modes of employing and remunerating or robbing labor have been placed before the reader, and the change from master workman to capitalist employer, the organization of capital, the formation and growth of guilds, trades unions, and labor societies, considered. . . . The works of many other writers on the subject have been referred to and discussed. The purpose being to throw all possible light on the subject, their books have been analyzed in all frankness."—Author's note.

Piatt, Sarah M. B. In primrose time: a new Irish garland. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 70 p. nar. D. cl., $1.

As in her former volumes, so in this, Irish scenes, associations, and traditions have stimulated the poetic genius of the author. This volume contains poems on "An Irish fairy story," "An emigrant singing from a ship," "Birdsnesting in Ireland," "The legend of Monkstown," "The ivy of Ireland," "In primrose time," and six others, all of which give evidence of the same originality, vigor, and lyrical fancy that have made her other volumes so welcome.

Picard, G: H. Old Boniface: a novel. N. Y., White, Stokes & Allen, 1886. 4+279 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The man whose name is taken as the title for the book does not appear upon the scene at all, though constantly referred to by the characters and exerting a certain influence upon their fates. He is a bank clerk in New York and the father of Kitty Boniface, a charming girl, who is travelling in Europe with her aunt, Mrs. Georgiana Swift, who is the wife of a great N. Y. railway lawyer. Whilst on their way homeward the aunt and niece linger in London, and Kitty becomes acquainted with Kenneth Blackie, who forthwith falls in love with her. His Scotch aunts and broken-down old father are unusually good character-sketches. Kitty and Kenneth's love experience and the influence exerted upon them by "Old Boniface's" misfortunes are the leading themes.

Plato. Talks with Socrates about life; translations from the Gorgias and the republic of Plato. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons. 1886. 20+176 p. S. cl., $1; pap., 50 c.

Four years ago the literary world was delighted by the appearance of a new translation, by an unknown hand, of some of Plato's immortal masterpieces, which was at once pronounced by scholars far superior to any ever before given to English readers, and the best adapted for the every-day use of the average reader. This new book, from the hand of the same translator, promises to be quite as successful and useful as its predecessors.

Plimpton, Florus B. Poems. Cin., Mrs. F. B. Plimpton, office of the Cincinnati Daily Commercial, 1886. 24+155 p. il. O. cl., $2.

Mr. Plimpton, who died in April of this year, was for over 20 years connected with the Cincinnati Daily Commercial as one of its literary editors. In this volume, carefully edited by his wife, are the poems of his youth and the compositions of his mature years, gathered from the columns of various periodicals and magazines. A number of graceful tributes to his worth as a man and as a writer from his associates precede the poems. In one of these Murat Halstead says: "There was something in the poetry of Plimpton that was rare and precious." Another fellow-worker adds this tribute: "His poetry is graceful and gentle, the reflex of happy moods, or of tender seriousness. It is characterized by an intense love of natural scenery, especially far-reaching pastoral or forest loveliness. His lines are very musical and owe their melody to an inborn sense of rhythm." The work is issued in very handsome style, with all the attractions of fine paper, wide margins, and graceful initial letters and head and tail pieces. Also contains a number of full-page pictures, made especially for the work, by well-known artists.

Plongeon, Augustus le. Sacred mysteries among the Mayas and the Quiches 11,500 years ago, their relation to the sacred mysteries of Egypt, Greece, Chaldea and India — Free Masonry in times anterior to the Temple of Solomon. Brooklyn, L. I., A le Plongeon, 204 Washington St., 1886. 16+163 p. O. cl., $2.50.

A scholarly work, in which the author endeavors "to show that the ancient sacred mysteries, the origin of Free Masonry consequently, date from a period far more remote than the most sanguine students of its history ever imagined." He tries to "trace their origin, step by step, to this continent which we inhabit—to America—from where Maya colonists transported their ancient religious rites and ceremonies, not only to the banks of the Nile, but to those of the Euphrates and the shores of the Indian Ocean, not less than 11,500 years ago." The writer's style is clear, convincing, and most captivating. The author has spent considerable time in South and Central America, and bases his remarks on observations and discoveries made by himself on the sites of the cities of the Mayas and Quiches. Nevertheless, he modestly claims to "present only such facts as can be proved by the works of well-known writers, ancient and modern, and by the inscriptions carved on stone by the Maya learned men and historians."

Pollard, Josephine. Vagrant verses. N. Y., Phillips & Hunt [1886.] 216 p. T. cl., $1

A little moral or religious sentiment is characteristic of each of these pleasing poems. There are over one hundred in the pretty gilt-edged volume gathered from the Century, Harper's Weekly, the Independent, New York Ledger, Sunday-School Times, and Congregationalist, where they originally appeared Pole, W. The philosophy of whist: an essay on the scientific and intellectual aspects of the modern game. N. Y., G: Munro, [1886.] 3-174 p. S. (Seaside lib. pocket ed., no. 669.) pap., 20 c.

Polo, Marco Voyages and travels. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 192 p. S. (Cassell's national lib., no. 29.) pap., 10 c.

Pomegranate seed: a novel, by the author of "The Two Miss Flemings," etc. N. Y., Harper & Bros., 1886. 67 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 534.) pap., 20 c.

Paris, Ireland, Poland, and finally Mexico furnish the scenes for this vivid story of political intrigue and glowing patriotism. The plot is involved, but artistically handled. Helen Staroska, a beautiful Pole, and her daughter Désirée are the heroines. Désirée's husband is for a long time supposed guilty of killing Helen's husband, and she separates from him on that account. The agony of mind and body suffered by him finally induce Désirée to return to him and forgive him. This novel is worth a careful reading. The cause of humanity appeals to Helen at the age of sixteen, and her whole life is sacrificed to her work for the needy and oppressed.

The eleventh volume in the series Twelve hundred years ago Tarik, the Moor, added the land of the Visigoths to the long catalogue of kingdoms subdued by the Moslems. For nearly eight centuries, under the Mohammedan rulers, Spain set to all Europe a shining example of a civilized and enlightened state. In 1492 the last bulwark of the Moors gave way before the crusade of Ferdinand and Isabella, whose Roman Catholic sympathies killed Moslem rule. The Inquisition rule was followed by desolation, and Spain has never recovered. This book is devoted to her greatness, not to her degradation under the Bourbons.

Poole, Rev. W. H. Anger; its nature, causes, and cure. Cin., Cranston & Stowe, 1886. 2-163 p. S. cl., 60 c.

The substance of these pages was given in two discourses to the congregation of the Simpson Methodist Episcopal Church, Detroit. The aim is to promote "the graces of meekness, patience, and brotherly love."

Porter, C: Talbot. Mechanics and faith. a study of spiritual truth in nature. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 8+295 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Opposite as mechanics and faith would seem at a first view, it is the author's conviction that as both are realities "it is possible that harmonies and relations of the most perfect and intimate nature may exist between them" In a series of papers he has endeavored "to exhibit the intimate connection that exists between those forms of truth which are known as spiritual truths and those forms of truth which are embraced in the term 'mechanical truth,' or rather to show the essential unity of these varied modes of expression of universal truth." He believes his arguments offer a solid foundation of faith, and are admirably adapted to meeting the fallacies of materialism.

Porter, Noah. Kant's ethics: a critical exposition. Chic., S. C. Griggs & Co., 1886. 15+249 p. S. (German philosophical classics.) cl., $1.25.

"In expounding Kant's ethical theory to English reader, the writer has thought it best to state this theory very largely in Kant's own language, with such comments as might be required to make it intelligible. He has done this for two reasons: that he might be entirely just to Kant himself, and that he might aid the unpractised student in the somewhat discouraging task of interpreting the German philosopher. For both these reasons he has often retained Kant's peculiar and frequently highly technical phraseology in order that, by more repetition, it might become familiar, while yet he has sought to give its meaning in current English that the student might acquire facility in interpreting the Kantian dialect by its English equivalents."—Preface. Besides the expository and critical matter described, there is a brief general introduction, together with a summary or condensed review of the distinctive positions taken by Kant upon the most important topics as compared with those of others—principally English—writers, and some brief strictures upon Kant by a few German critics.

Posnett, Hutcheson Macaulay. Comparative literature. N Y., Appleton, 1886. 6+402p. D. (International sci. ser no. 54.) cl., $1.75.
The author has essayed to "follow the effects of social and individual evolution on literature from the rudest beginnings of song down to the poetry of the great Western Republic." "We have," he says, "but glanced at the progress of prose in place of those metrical forms which in the absence of writing supplied supports for the memory; the influence of conversation private and public—its character largely depending on the forms of social communion in which men meet—on such progress in the East and West; the influence of individualized thinking, of philosophy—in fact, upon the form and spirit of prose in Athens and Rome and modern Europe."

Postgate, J: L. Two women in black, il. by True W. Williams. N. Y. and Chic., Belford, Clarke & Co., 1886. D. (Mooney and Boland detective ser., no. 2.) cl. $1: pap. 50 c.

Postgate, J: W. A woman's devotion, or, the mixed marriage: a story of the rival detectives: an American novel founded on facts. Chic., Rand, McNally & Co., [1886.] 270 p. D. pap., 35 c.
The scene is laid in Illinois; the theme is a crime committed in Montcalm, a town supposed to be near Chicago. A small space is given to the details of the murder of Farmer Jones, but the story is for the most part devoted to the detection of the murderer. This question baffles the skill of the "Rival detectives" employed on the case, false clews are followed and strange complications ensue; which add interest to the story, before the detective, Hood, succeeds in discovering the murderess and her motive, which Farmer Jones's history will reveal to the reader.

Potter, Cora Urquhart. comp. My recitations. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1887 [1886.] 6+326 p. por. D. cl., $1.
Nearly 100 poems from standard authors and from anonymous ones. Many of the pieces are old and familiar, while others are less widely known. They are all especially well adapted for public recitation, while there is sufficient variety to suit the tastes of the most varied audiences. A good portrait of Mrs. Potter opens the volume.

Praed, Mrs. Campbell. The head station: a novel of Australian life. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 236 p. S (Harper's handy ser., no. 77.) pap., 25c.
A large cattle station in New South Wales is the scene of several studies in human nature. The scenes and customs of life at the Antipodes are vividly sketched; the story moves, and has plot and originality. The devotion of colonists to the mother country is well brought out. England's practice of sending troublesome and criminal young men to people her foreign possessions is severely criticised The dialogue is spirited and suggestive.

Price, A. A willful young woman: a novel. [Anon.] N. Y., Harper, 1886. 60 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 556.) pap., 20 c.

Scene, a west-country town in England. A rich magistrate, John Alwyn, marries late in life a stylish, handsome widow of thirty-five, with one daughter. When the second daughter, Sydney, comes into the world, her mother is much vexed, all her love being given her first husband's child. Sydney worships her father, and when he loses his fortune and her mother refuses to share the allowance she has received as marriage settlement, Sydney tries in every way to promote his comfort. He dies, and after years of suffering from her mother's peculiarities, Sydney goes as companion to a lady and her blind brother. After many changes she recovers her father's fortune and devotes herself to making those about her happy. By the author of "Who is Sylvia?"

Radestock, Paul. Habit and its importance in education: an essay in pedagogical psychol-ogy; from the German by F. A. Caspari, with an introd. by G. Stanley Hall. Bost., D. C. Heath & Co., 1886. 9+117 p. D. cl., 65c.

The author assumes that, so far as education becomes a science, or teaching a profession, it will rest more entirely upon psychology. Education he regards as progressive habituation, and good habits as even more important than good principles. Habit not only lays down the trunk lines of association, and thus gives direction, but it furnishes momentum of mind and will. He also holds that we have truly learned not what we can be examined on, but what has become second nature or habit.

Rae, G: The country banker: his clients, cares, and work; from an experience of forty years; with an American preface by Brayton Ives. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 14+320 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author's purpose is not to formulate afresh the fundamental principles of banking, but rather to show these principles in operation. In pursuance of this en-deavor, he has availed himself of illustrative matter glean-ed from the incidents of an experience of over forty years of the life and work of country banking, in its relations with customers and shareholders, the officials in its em-ployment, and the general public. His desire has been less to advance special views of his own than to exemplify, from fresh points of observation, the accustomed lines and recognized limits of prudent banking. Author of "Bul-lion's letters to a bank manager."

Ragozin, Zénaïde A. The story of Chaldea from the earliest times to the rise of Assyria, treated as a general introduction to the study of ancient history. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 15+381 p. il. D. (Story of the nations ser.) cl., $1.50.

"A highly important contribution to historic lore is made by Madame Zénaïde Ragozin, who writes intelli-gently and forcibly on Oriental traditions, customs, civ-ilization, and religion. The basis for her work is found in the treasures dug from the mounds of Mesopotamia, in Assyria and Chaldea, by the famous archæologists Rich, Botta, Layard, and George Smith, the young Eng-lish enthusiast, who died of the plague in Syria in 1876, after five years' hard work among the hidden chambers of buried cities. In four introductory chapters the author summarizes the work of discovery and excavation since 1842. Numerous engravings of architectural designs, of tiles and friezes, of slabs and statuary, of pottery and scraps of alabaster ornaments, illustrate this portion of the work, and the introduction closes with a résumé of the historic treasures found in the recesses of the "library" of Nineveh. In the second part of the book the story of Chaldea is told. The book is fraught with rich treasures of knowledge; its spirited style and graceful diction lend a charm and a fascination to its pages that overcome any feeling of discouragement that might be suggested by the title or the subject with which it deals." —Boston Gazette

"This is a real book of new fairy tales," Mr. Morley tells us in his introduction—"gatherings and legends of the people, partly Indian, partly Chinese, have been touched by the genius of a writer, himself from the East, who brings his own wit and fancy to the telling of his tales, and is as ready to invent as to hand down tradition." Mr. Raju is an anglicized Asiatic, who had just been called to the bar of the Inner Temple when he left England for India, leaving the manuscript of his book in the hands of Prof. Morley. Every reader will indorse Prof. Morley's opinion that these tales are unusually fresh and delightful. The book is bound in attractive style, and fully illustrated.

Lord Usk, having run deeply into debt, sells his Scotch possessions to an American millionaire and at the beginning of the shooting-season feels completely lost in his English castle. His wife fills the house with "a house-party" she thinks will enjoy themselves together, regardless of society rules generally observed when inviting guests. There are many peculiar conversations between Lord and Lady Usk, in which Ouida once more voices her ideas about society as it is and as it might, could, and should be. "Don Gesualdo" is the story of a devoted priest who sacrifices himself to save a young girl from being sentenced for murder, as he cannot clear her without betraying the secrets of the confessional. "A rainy June" is a most disheartening picture of a honeymoon spent in England by a Roman bon-vivant and his correct English wife. It is told in letters

Randall, D. A., D.D. Ham-mishkan, the wonderful tent: an account of the structure, signification, and spiritual lessons of the Mosaic Tabernacle erected in the wilderness of Sinai; with por. and sketch of the author. Cin., Rob. Clarke & Co., 1886. 44+420 p. il. D. cl., $2.
Dr. Randall, divine, traveller, writer, and lecturer, was a painstaking and patient student, and spent much of his time for many years in the preparation of this work. He made an extended tour in Egypt, the wilderness, and Palestine, and made himself familiar with the scenes and memories of the places. In simple, easy language the volume gives an account of the sojourn at the foot of Mt Sinai of a party of travellers, consisting of a Christian, a learned rabbi, and other Biblical scholars. In imagination the Tabernacle is rebuilt and accurately studied. Its entirety and detail, and all of interest that pertains to it, are brought out in a series of delightful discussions held by the company during their encampment beneath the rugged, barren peaks of Sinai. By this method the author succeeds in adorning his subject with the v. riety and fascination of conversational narrative and interests his reader from first to last. Biblical knowledge, Hebrew lore, historical incident, and theological theory are interwoven in a manner as pleasing as it is instructive.

In a series of twenty-eight essays Prof. Raymond, of the New Jersey College at Princeton, maintains that poetry "is an art, and partakes of the nature of the fine arts; and that, as such, its one essential is a representative form appealing to a man through that which causes him to admire the beautiful" and he undertakes to show that there are absolute standards of poetic excellence, which can be ascertained, and that upon them can be founded a system of criticism both simple and scientific. In so far as a poem departs from a truly representative intention or form, it is defective. Prof. Raymond discusses this principle with great elaborateness and with copious illustrations drawn from the works of English poets of all times

Representative poems of living poets, American and English, selected by the poets themselves; with an introduction by G: Parsons Lathrop. N. Y., Cassell & Co., 1886. 48+683 p. O. cl., $5.

The idea of this compilation, it appears from the preface, first suggested itself to Miss Jeannette L. Gilder, although her name does not appear on the title-page. She did the work, however, of selecting a number of the best poems of each poet, and submitting the list to the poet himself or herself for final choice. In many cases her choice was approved, in others the poet designated special pieces by which he preferred to be represented. The collection is unique in its way, and has all the attraction of novelty. Eighty poets are represented by three hundred poems, which we feel confident are the best work they have done, at least in the majority of cases. Of course the limitations of space precluded all thought of accepting long poems. Mr. Lathrop's introduction is a graceful tribute to the poets of to-day. The book is handsomely printed on fine white paper, with ample margins, and has two full indexes.

Every other page is ruled, with blanks for keeping whist-scores and items of interest concerning the parties who have taken parts in the various games, or facts about the game itself worth recording. The alternate pages contain reading-matter relating to cards—very curious information having been gathered from various sources—such as the etymologies and meanings of certain words connected with whist—a history of the game, and interesting extracts from generally inaccessible works relating to it; a history of playing-cards; carding and gaming in France, England, and Germany; gaming at Monte Carlo, gambling in America, clergymen and cards, whist, etc. The bibliography covers 10 pages.

Rhodes, M. Vital questions pertaining to Christian belief. Phil., Lutheran Pub. Soc., 1886. 210 p. D. cl., $1.

These nine lectures were written during the summer of 1885, and for the most part delivered in the writer's pulpit. The author aims to present Christianity and infidelity in their practical results, and speaks to the people, with young men specially in mind. His subjects are: The folly of atheism; Has God made any revelation of himself to man? Can we dispense with God? Is the Bible inspired? The divinity of Jesus Christ; Probation after death; Some causes of infidelity; Some weaknesses of infidelity.

Special chapters are devoted to an exposition of the researches of Herbart, Lotze, Fechner, and Wundt. Dr. McCosh says in his preface: "We have now a clear and comprehensive account of the German observations, experiments, and discussions in this work of M. Ribot, with which every student of psychology should be acquainted." He says further: "I am not sure that he has set a sufficiently high value on the observations of consciousness; but just here another of his excellencies is seen: he has carefully separated psychology, which is a science of observation, external and internal, throughout from all metaphysical speculation." The only additions made by Mr. Baldwin to this work are some English bibliographical notes.

Rice, Allen Thorndike, ed. Reminiscences of Abraham Lincoln by distinguished men of his time. N. Y., North American Pub. Co., 1886. 58+656 p. pors. and il. O. cl., subs., $4; shp., $5; hf. mor., $6; full tky. mor., $9.

The plan of this volume was conceived with the object of accumulating trustworthy evidence concerning the personal traits and private utterances of Abraham Lincoln, from the men still surviving who became distinguished characters during the great Civil War. The distinguished men who speak are Gen. Grant, Elihu B. Washburne, Geo. W. Julian, Reuben E. Fenton, John P. Usher, Geo. Sewall Boutwell, Gen. B. F. Butler, Chas. Carleton Coffin, Frederick Douglass, and many others. A biographical sketch of all of these men showing their relation to national events is added, and portraits of many of them and a few scenes from the early life of the great war President give additional interest to the book. The fac-simile letter from Seward to Adams, then English minister, with the President's corrections, is also given.

The aim of this work is analytical and critical rather than descriptive. In a series of intensely interesting chapters Mr. Richardson endeavors to demonstrate what American writers have thus far done worthy to be mentioned beside the works of the great writers of the old world; what of our books are world's-books and why; how and why American writers have succeeded and failed. The chapters are entitled: The race elements in American literature; The new environment of the Saxon mind: Early descriptive and historical writers: The theologians of the 17th and 18th centuries; Benjamin Franklin; Political literature; Washington Irving; Religion and philosophy in later years; Ralph Waldo Emerson; Essayists: Historians; Borderlands of American literature.

A newspaper man's impressions of London. Mr. Richardson did not visit any of the regulation "sights" during his stay in the "dark city," but confined his observations to the people, the streets, the theatres, the hotels, and various odd ways and customs. His account of these is most amusing, and quite out of the stereotyped line of the every-day traveller, yet bearing unmistakably the evidence of truth. No better description of London just as it actually is to day has recently been published.

The favorable reception of the American translation of Richter's "Inorganic chemistry" has led to the translation of the present volume. In it will be found an unusually large amount of material, necessitated by the rapid advances in this department of chemical science. The portions of the work which suffice for an outline of the science are presented in large type, while in the smaller print is given equally important matter for the advanced student. Will answer not only as a text-book and reference volume, but as a guide in carrying out work in the organic laboratory. To this end numerous methods are given for the preparation of the most important and the most characteristic derivatives of the different classes of bodies.

Ricker, N. Clifford. Elementary graphic statics and the construction of trussed roofs: a manual of theory and practice. N. Y., W: T. Comstock, 1885. 158 p. il. and tables. O. cl., $2.

A portion of this work appeared in the form of a series of articles on the construction of roofs, published in Building. These articles have been carefully revised and greatly extended by the addition of such matter as appeared necessary to make the work more suitable as a manual for instruction, for private study, or for reference. It now essentially represents the course of study in graphic statics, with special application to trussed roofs, pursued by the students in the school of architecture of the University of Illinois (in which the author is professor of architecture) for several years past, after a trial of the more favorably known text-books treating this subject.

Rickoff, Andrew F. Numbers applied: a complete arithmethic. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 4+416 p. il. D. (Appleton's standard arithmetics.) cl., 88 c.

The publishers issue this work in response to "a widespread and growing demand for a treatise on arithmetic adapted to the objective methods of instruction now so common in all educational institutions which have been reached, directly or indirectly, by the influence of normal schools, teachers' institutes, etc." In its preparation the author has kept steadily in view these two thoughts: (1) That words are useless in the ratio that they fail to call up in the mind images of the things signified. Hence the aim to vitalize the relation of words and things by the aid of the best practical illustrations at every point; and (2) that, to the learner, the operations of arithmetic are apt to be but manipulations of figures after prescribed models, unless he realizes the fact that they are representative of processes that may be applied to material objects. Intended to be put into the hands of the learner as soon as he has completed a course in primary arithmetic.

Rickoff, Andrew F., and Davis, E. C. Numbers illustrated and applied in language, drawing and reading lessons an arithmetic for primary schools. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 160 p. il. D. (Appleton's standard arithmetics.) bds., 42 c.

The first volume of a new series of arithmetics. Dr. Rickoff, one of the oldest and most progressive educators of the country, has been actively engaged in the preparation of the series for several years. He has had the assistance of able and experienced teachers. While the books will embrace all the best and most successful methods now in use in arithmetical work, they will also present some new methods of illustration, pictorially, and otherwise. The present volume is specially attractive in illustrations and general appearance.

This collection of stories and poems by the author of "The old swimmin' hole," etc., are full of promise. Mr. Riley has a special talent for sketching the salient traits and graphic slang of the gamin of the streets, and for describing the many odd characters which float in the outward circle of life. The tales all have a strong pathetic element, as well as a humorous side. The poems are tender and graceful and full of melody.

Robbins, Mrs. S. S. Dick, the captain of the family ship. N. Y., Rob. Carter & Bros., [1886.] 3-199 p. S. (The Gillettes ser., no. 1.) cl., 75 c.

The first of six volumes, to form a new series By the author of the "Win and Wear series." The books are all to tell the fortunes of a family named Gillettes. There were six children, and each one is to have his or her little history told to illustrate some virtue within the reach of all boys and girls. Dick's father was lost at sea, and Dick, the eldest, became "captain of the family ship." The books are intended to furnish reading for Sunday afternoons. Integrity is Dick's virtue

Robbins, Mrs. S. S. Nan, the missionary. N. Y., Rob. Carter & Bros., [1886.] 194 p. S. (The Gillettes ser., no. 2), cl., 75 c.

The second child in the Gillettes family. She is taken by an aunt to help her in the house at $1 a month. Nan's virtue is unselfishness.

"That child" is a little waif whose mother is killed in a railway accident. She is adopted by Miss Beaumont, a lady fond of reading, who feeds her young mind with most heterogeneous information. The death of her benefactress leaves the child in the hands of the second Miss Beaumont, who is systematic and commonplace, and imitates Avice constantly. The old organist who is planning a history of his parish is a splendid character. He teaches Avice music, which she loves passionately, and influences her life in many important ways. Varying scenes and a succession of sensations revolve around the diabolical act of a child. Olga Damien, at the age of ten years, first hears of the exploit of her ancestress, Charlotte Corday; she broods upon the strange story, and finally becomes a youthful Corday, selecting Victor Burnsides for her Murat; the Damascene dagger did not do its deadly work, and her intended victim lives and sees that Olga has tried to make "good come of evil," so exacts that she will keep the secret of her crime inviolate. She does this at the expense of misunderstanding, but events right themselves, and Olga's victim becomes her Victor.

Roe, E: P. He fell in love with his wife. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., [1886.] 4+333 p. D. cl. $1.50.

James Holcroft is a lonely, reserved, middle-aged man, who had recently lost his wife. He is a farmer, and endeavors after his grief is somewhat allayed to go on with his house and dairy with the aid of hired help. His experience is most disheartening—he is robbed, deceived, and the object of matrimonial schemes from women of all kinds, and all ages. In a desperate moment he tells his troubles to an old friend, Tom Watterly, the keeper of the poor-house. Tom's advice is similar to that given him by other friends—to marry again, following up his advice by recommending a person to Holcroft he thinks will make him a suitable wife; the woman is then an inmate of the poor-house, and the heroine of a most pitiful story. The marriage takes place under peculiar circumstances, the romance of the book beginning with Holcroft's awakening to the attractions of Mrs. Holcroft, who grows into a beautiful woman under the softening influence of peace and contentment.

Roe, Mrs. J. Harcourt. The bachelor vicar of Newforth: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1885. 192 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 44.) pap., 25c.

An English country town, with the usual accompaniment of love and gossip, forms the background for a clever, well-written story. The Rev. Theophilus Manley, the vicar, comes to Newforth in the prime of life, with good birth, fair means, and great intellectual power. He finds the church and congregation dying of apathy and indifference. He inspires both with new life, and raises himself to the highest pitch of popularity. A foolish scandal, based upon a misunderstanding of facts, ruins his character, and he loses both his church and his lady love. His subsequent wanderings and sufferings and final reinstatement are full of pathos.

Roosevelt, Rob. Barnwell. Love and luck: the story of a summer's loitering on the Great South Bay. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 4+350 p. S. bds., $1.

Having exhausted almost all places of summer and winter resort, the fortunate people of whom this rollicking story treats resolve to build a yacht and spend the next summer sailing about from place to place. The plan is formed at Saratoga, which they find very hot; the boat is built at Garden City and launched on the Sound. The characters are well described, particularly the young man who spent all his time changing his suits and "gurgling" his replies. The author's reputation as a sportsman is so well known that it is needless to say when the boat is finally started things move briskly. A fondness for frequent meals and plentiful supplies of champagne characterizes several members of the party.

A large proportion was taken from family manuscript books, some few have been contributed by pupils, and the remainder taken from the standard authorities on cooking. Rosengarten, J. G. The German soldier in the wars of the United States. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 175 p. D. cl., $1.

Traces the services rendered by Germans from the very outset of their settlement in this country to the end of the War of the Rebellion. Originally an address—read before the Pionier Verein in Philadelphia in 1885—it is naturally condensed in form, but it is comprehensive as to facts and very interesting in style.

Rosenkranz, J: K. F: The philosophy of education; from the German by Anna C. Brackett. 2d ed. rev., and accompanied with commentary and analysis. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 27—280 p. D. (International educational ser., no. 1.) cl., $1.50.

This work was translated originally for The Journal of Speculative Philosophy. It was intended for the use of philosophical students, and the terse German of the original was rendered by equally terse English. An edition of two thousand copies was reprinted in a separate volume. Demands for the work continuing after the first edition was exhausted, it was determined to publish a new one. For this purpose a revision has been made of the translation with a view to better adapt it to the needs of readers not skilled in philosophy. Where it has been thought necessary, phrases, or even entire sentences, have been used to convey the sense of a single word of the original. The first part considers the general idea of education—its nature, its form, its limits. The second part, education in its special elements. The third, education in its particular systems.

Contains exercises in calisthenics and in gesture arranged for systematic practice; brief explanation of the organs of speech, with full directions for development of the breathing organs, and for acquiring control and economy of breath; simple and explicit directions for the cultivation, preservation, and proper use of the voice in speaking and in singing; explanation and classification of the elements of speech, with a complete arrangement of tables, words, and sentences for practice in articulation, and a choice collection of original and selected pieces for reading and recitation. It has been the aim of the author to embody in this work the course of instruction which has resulted from an experience of twenty five years as a teacher of elocution.

Rossetti, Dante Gabriel. The blessed damozel, il. by Kenyon Cox. N. Y., Dodd Mead & Co., 1886. F. cl., $15.

A series of plates illustrating Rossetti's poem. They are mostly figure studies, and are finished with much care. The original designs were done in oil, and are reproduced by photogravure. The work is a superb one in all its details; the paper is exceedingly rich, the printing soft and beautiful. The binding shows a characteristic design by Kenyon Cox.

Rossetti, Maria Francesca. A shadow of Dante: being an essay toward studying himself, his world and his pilgrimage. [2d ed.] Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 8+294 p. il. and diagram, D. cl., $1.50.

The title is almost self-explanatory. The book is practically a guide book, a commentary, and an exposition of Dante's great poem. The author says: "My plan is very simple. After in some degree setting forth what Dante's universe is as a whole, and what autobiography and history show his life experience to have been, I proceed to expound in greater detail the physical and moral theories on which his three worlds are constructed, and to narrate, now in his own words, now in a prose summary, the course of his stupendous pilgrimage."

Roux, Jos. Meditations of a parish priest: thoughts; introduction by Paul Mariéton; from the 3d French ed., by Isabel F. Hapgood. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 32+313 p. D. cl., $1.25.
The Abbé Roux was born at Tulle, France, in 1834, in very humble circumstances. He was early destined for the priesthood. He preferred teaching, but in order to pursue his studies abandoned it, and accepted the vicarship of the village Varetz, doubly poetical through its site and its legends. But he lived in great seclusion and wrote and studied incessantly. In 1874 the Centenary of Petrarch called Roux into notice. The festival was celebrated in Southern France by the Félibres, a society for the promotion and revival of Provençal poetry. Mr. Paul Mariéton as poet in French and Provençal, made the acquaintance of the Abbé and struck with his work in dialect brought him into public notice. The present translation of the "Pensées" is very well done. The volume abounds in terse, epigrammatic sentences, grouped under subjects showing the simplicity of a child and the brain and classical culture of a philosopher.

"But little attention is paid to the early settlers and colonists of the Pacific slope in this work, the author confining himself almost wholly to the transition period from 1846 to 1856, during which the United States obtained control of the territory and undertook to make it an integral part of the republic. The "Bear Flag" revolution and the operations of Captain Fremont are treated quite fully, owing to their important bearing on the subsequent acquisition of the province; and a clear insight is afforded into the diplomacy of Polk's administration. The breaking out of the gold craze in 1848-49 and the enormous inflow of immigrants, speculators, prospectors, roughs, and adventurers of all sorts and grades marked the next stage in the history of the State. Prof. Royce's descriptions of these people, and of the struggles made by the thinking men of the mining communities for public order, give evidence of very wide and careful reading and study of written history and manuscript reports. The book which he gives us will be found as interesting and instructive as any in the series, so far issued. It is well and carefully written, and based upon the most thorough research." —Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

Most of this description of a sea-voyage appeared in the London Daily Telegraph; but about a third is now published for the first time. Mr. Russell set sail from Plymouth and took this voyage for his health; when he felt better he began to look into the inner life of the ship and here gives a vivid description of life on board an ocean steamer. There are many foot-notes that give important facts of travel and history. Mr. Russell's love of the sea and love of humanity are happily combined in these pages.

The second volume in this new biographical series. Living from 1650 until 1722, John Churchill, Lord Marlborough, was one of the most important figures of his day. History and romance have furnished volumes of which he was hero. Mr. Saintsbury gives the main facts of Marlborough's life, stated, it is believed, impartially from the best authorities, and certainly commented on without the least determination to make the man a fiend or an angel. Against his character the worst that can be said has been said in Thackeray's "Henry Esmond" and Macaulay's "History of England." A good subject index and a "biographical note" referring to authorities quoted, add to the value of the volume.

"The most scholarly book that has been published in this country since the beginning of the present year. It is the most valuable manual that has yet been presented to the students of English prose, in that it contains through its selections the outlines of a complete history thereof, beginning with the 'Morte d'Arthur' of Sir Thomas Malory, which was printed by Caxton in 1485, and ending with Lord Macaulay's History of England, circa 1855—in other words, the history of English prose for about three and three quarter centuries—and in the writings of one hundred of the most famous authors who flourished during that time. In no other work with which we are acquainted can its progress be traced so clearly from its first rude and inelegant, but forcible, origins in Malory, Latimer, Elyot, and Ascham, down to its studied and mannered culminations of strength and picturesqueness in Carlyle and Macaulay. To read it attentively and thoughtfully is to perceive the structure and growth of the English mind and character, the influences, religious, social, political, and other, which moulded them and clustered around them, and which assisted or retarded them in their literary expression, in what one of their master poets called 'the other harmony of prose.'"—*N. In preparing this volume, it has been the editor's aim to assist the student, as far as possible, with all the resources of modern scholarship. The text is based on that of Jordan. The orthography is that of Brambach. For the benefit of beginners, copious references to Harkness's "Latin grammar" have been inserted in the notes. The notes are based primarily on those of Kritz, Jacobs-Wirtz, and Schmalz; but the Roman histories of Mommsen and Ihne, and the works of Mommsen and Marquardt, of Lange and of Madvig, on Roman antiquities, have been freely laid under contribution, to throw further light on the facts narrated by Sallust.

"Mr. Frank French and Mrs. M. E. Sangster have combined to illustrate by drawings and verses the affectionate relationship between the buds of the fields and the blossoms of the household. Mr. French has succeeded in engraving a series of heads of typical children with rare and delicate skill, each strongly suggestive of the flower it symbolizes. The volume, on its fine paper, with its clear type, its full-page illustrations of baby faces, and its head-pieces and tail-pieces of stray blossoms and clinging vines, will make a most valuable contribution to the universal language of flowers."

Sankey, C: The Spartan and Theban supremacies. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 19+231 p., maps and plans, S. (Epochs of ancient history.) cl., $1.

The period of history covered by this little book is full both of interest and of importance. In treating it the author has tried to bring out clearly the characters of the leading men and the causes of the chief events. The narrative is mainly based upon Xenophon and Plutarch, the editor acknowledging also having derived great assistance from the works of Thirlwall, Grote, Prof. E. Curtius, and the Rev. G. W. Cox, his co-editor, in editing the series.

Sargent, F: Leroy. Guide to the recognition of the principal orders of cryptogams and the commoner and more easily distinguished New England genera; with a full glossary. Cambridge, C: W. Sever, 1886. 38 p. D. cl., 75 c.

This little book was prepared for the use of students in the Summer Course in Botany in Harvard University. It brings together in systematic form and in a convenient shape such information as will enable a student to learn to recognize a number of the commoner conspicuous genera of cryptogams. It is bound with blank interleaves, for the convenience of students wishing to insert notes and sketches.

An answer to the lecture delivered by Dr. Talmage in the "Star Course" on the "Absurdities of evolution." Dr. Savage is a radical Unitarian, but a devout deist. He is well known as a competent and courageous champion of Spencer and Darwin. He charges the prevalence of nominal unbelief upon the real unbelief of the Church, which insists on the infallibility of traditions which the Creator contradicts by the revelations contained in His works. Eloquence and wit make the present treatment of the subject very fascinating. A short list of books on evolution is given.

Savage, M. J. Social problems. Bost., G: H. Ellis, 1886. 5-189 p. D. cl., $1.

Twelve sermons showing that the religion of to-day should be eminently practical, and must be interested in the labor problem. Mr. Savage claims that the great remedy for discontent is a change in ideals and not national legislation or social reconstruction. Success in life must come to mean culture of the heart and brain and the perception of the beauty, goodness and fitness of the world.

Schaff, Philip. Saint Augustin, Melanchthon, Neander: three biographies. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls, 1886. 168 p. D. cl., $1.

The life of Augustin reproduces the substance of Augustin's Confessions, which is still one of the greatest books of devotion, and adds an account of his immense literary activity and influence on the Catholic and Protestant churches. The sketch of Melanchthon and his relation to Luther and Calvin brings before us the life and character of the most peaceful and gentle among the Reformers. It introduces us into the midst of the great religious revival of the sixteenth century, and into the domestic and social life of the Wittenberg Reformers. The reminiscences of Neander give the fullest account which has as yet appeared of the personal character and spiritual life of the modern "Father of church history," drawn from the author's familiar intercourse with his teacher and friend. The book is written in popular style, and is especially adapted to young men and students.

Scherer, W. A history of German literature; tr. from the 3d German ed. by Mrs. F. C. Conybeare; ed. by F. Max Müller. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 2 v. 9+401, 3+425 p. D. cl., $3.50.

A history of German literature from the earliest times to the death of Goethe. The first chapter traces the roots of German nationality back to the period preceding the Aryan separation, giving a picture of the intellectual condition of the times: the second treats of the rise and development of the German hero legends; the third of the Mediæval renaissance; the fourth to the seventh embrace the classical period of Middle High German lyric and epic poetry; the eighth and ninth chapters include the next three hundred years, the period of transition from Middle High-German to New High German; the tenth to the thirteenth chapters are devoted to the unfinished epoch in which we live. A chronological table at the end of the book will be found of much assistance to the student in mastering the subject, as will also the careful and exhaustive bibliography in the appendix, giving all known authorities for the earlier period, and the editions (separate and collected) of the works of modern authors, together with a list of the critiques and commentaries written upon them. This work is already an authority in Germany, and fills here a long-felt want. It is scholarly and at the same time popular in treatment, comprising in a convenient space all that is important to know of German literature.

Schiller, J: F: von. Ausgewählte briefe; selected and edited with an introduction and commentary by Pauline Buchheim. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 15+206 p. S. (German classics for American students, no. 5.) cl., $1.

In making the present selection from Schiller's correspondence, the compiler has been guided chiefly by the desire to bring together those letters which present the most characteristic view of the development of his genius and of the various stages of his literary career. Some letters have been chosen either on account of their reference to matters of general interest in Schiller's days, or because they present us with a picture of the manners of his times. The notes explain unusual constructions and idiomatic peculiarities, and give such historical, personal, and literary explanations as are necessary for the elucidation of the text. The introduction gives a brief sketch of those of Schiller's friends to whom the letters are addressed.

Schindler, Solomon. Messianic expectations and modern Judaism: lectures delivered at the Temple Adath Israel, Bost. · with an introduction by Minot J. Savage. Bost., S. E. Cassino & Co., 1886. 6+290 p. D. cl., $1.50.

These lectures by a Jew were delivered to an audience more than half of which was Christian. After long centuries of enmity some Christians and some Jews have grown brave enough to question their traditions. They dare to be hospitable to new ideas, and to think that even the religious world may become wiser, and that maturity may know more than childhood. So they realize that religious hate was born of religious ignorance and conceit, and that a truer knowledge of God means a broader love for man. The author's theory of an ideal church for Jew and Christian is clear and forcible.

Schmidt, Oscar. The mammalia in their relation to primeval times. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 14+308 p. il. D. (International sci. ser., no. 53.) cl., $1.50.

Prof. Schmidt offers this work as a supplement to his "Doctrine of descent and Darwinism." "It will be found," he says in his preface, "to contain proof of the necessity, the truth, and the value of Darwinism as the foundation for the theory of descent, within a limited field, and is brought down to the most recent times." The book is divided into two parts. The first, a general introduction, considers the position of mammals in the animal kingdom; the phenomena of convergence; the distinctive characteristics of mammals; the extension of palæontological science since Cuvier and the strata of the tertiary. The second is devoted to a special comparison of the living mammals and their ancestors.

Schubin, Ossip. Gloria victis: a romance; from the German, by Mary Maxwell. N. Y., W: S. Gottsberger, 1886. 2+319 p. S. cl., 90 c.; pap., 50 c.

Shifting scenes, a fleeting love affair, and a fatal duel make up the transparent plot in which the Countess Lodrin is the prime mover. Wjera Lodrin, who has erred in her youth, strives to bury her past and create a future which she thinks will remain invincible; a few moments' idle gossip and her son's quarrel with a parvenu are sufficient to overthrow the frail structure which she has been thirty years building; but Oswald Lodrin's death is a grand victory, atoning for the shame of his birth. Schuyler, Eugene. American diplomacy and the furtherance of commerce. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 12+469 p. O. cl., $2.50.

This book is based on two courses of lectures. The first series, on our Consular and Diplomatic Service, was given at Johns Hopkins University, and also at Cornell University in the winter of 1884; the second at Cornell in 1885. The object was to explain the actual workings of one department of our government about which much misunderstanding exists. Mr. Schuyler desired to set forth the usefulness and the needs of these services to young men who were shortly to be called upon to perform the duties of citizens. Mr. Schuyler has had an experience of seventeen years as United States Consul at Moscow, St. Petersburg, Reval, Constantinople, Birmingham, Rome, Greece, Roumania, and Servia, during years when many most important international questions were agitated and settled. A ten-page index makes this a valuable work of reference.

Scofield, Rev. S. R. Hidden sunbeams. real incidents in frontier life in Western New York. Phil., Presb. Bd. of Pub., [1886.] 304 p. il. S. cl., $1.15.

The reader is taken back to the opening of the nineteenth century. The aim of the book is not, however, to give mere historical sketches; the incidents form but the framework of an interesting soul history, through which a man is led from unbelief into clear, bright faith. The argument from nature for the being and goodness of God is presented in conversation, link by link as the story goes on. The book is thus fitted to be put in the hands of those who are disposed to scepticism.

Scollard, Clinton. With reed and lyre. Bost. D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 7+173 p. S. cl., $1.

More than eighty poems that have appeared in many periodicals are here put into a neat, handy volume. They are classified as Flower-songs, Quatrains, Sonnets, Gallic Bonds, Jocosa Musæ and Miscellaneous. Mr. Scollard's first volume, called "Pictures in Song," was very well received by most critical reviewers on both sides of the Atlantic.

Scriver was born in 1629. He refused the offer to be court preacher and spiritual guide to the Queen of Sweden, at that time the most powerful Protestant kingdom in the world prompted by attachment to his sorely afflicted fatherland. The "Emblems" are a series of short sketches, which present the religious reflections of a devout and acute mind in connection with the common objects or occurrences of daily life, such as: A new suit of clothes; good weather; feeding the hens; the pillow; washing the hands; etc.

Seeley, J: Rob. A short history of Napoleon the First. Bost., Roberts Bros, 1886. 5+315 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author of "The life and times of Stein" makes a point of the fact that he had not studied Napoleon's life in order to write this little book, but that he wrote the book because he had for years studied the Napoleonic age from many points of view, and in many countries. The "life" is an expansion of an article originally written for the Encyclopædia Britannica; this is supplemented by an admirable essay on "Napoleon's place in history," in which Professor Seeley aims to judge how far Napoleon's career was favored and shaped by circumstances, and what Napoleon was in himself. His judgment is not a favorable one in any respect. The history is an excellent example of condensed writing, in which facts are clearly outlined, and details necessarily overlooked. The portrait is from an engraving after a picture by Boilly taken when Napoleon was First Consul

Stories of life and adventure in Texas and the southwest, somewhat in the style of Bret Harte. The author shows special talent in portraying the peculiarities and dialect of the characters of this part of the country. The stories include "A lone-star Bo-Peep," "The mystery of San Saba," "Three Strephons of Concho," "An episode of Paint Rock," "A stage coach enchantress," etc. etc.

Seiss, Jos. A., D.D. Right life; or, candid talks on vital themes Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886 3-382 p D. cl., $1 50.

The purpose of these lectures, delivered at the Church of the Holy Communion, Philadelphia, was rather to summarize the results of more systematic studies and to reproduce them in easy form for popular edification. They aim "to induce thinking young people, non-churchgoers, and persons in doubt or indifference respecting religion to undertake a candid survey of the leading questions of faith, and to give some serious attention to the foundation-principles of right life and what is to be said upon them, over against the Epicurean tendencies of the times, which are doing so much mischief in many circles."

Paul Hernshaw has accidentally killed his brother. He is just out of prison when the story opens. He determines to live down his shame in the very place his crime has been committed. He becomes overseer for his brother's wife, but after eight years is again turned off and taunted with his crime. A revivalist, preaching in the little town, brings back his faith in God. He becomes the man's assistant, and does work among the sick and poor that no one else will do. The two or three clergymen introduced are excellent studies. "Let him who is without sin among you cast the first stone," is the burden of the tale.

Twenty clergymen from different parts of the Union treat the subjects of the International lessons, which, for the first two quarters, are taken from the Old Testament, beginning with the creation and taking through the commandments, and for the last two quarters from the New Testament, beginning with the Saviour's birth and dwelling specially on the miracles

Severn, Lawrence. Heaven's gate: a story of the forest of Dean. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 11+348 p. D. (V. I. F. ser.) cl., $1.25.

"Heaven's gate" is the name of the estate of a well-to-do English gentleman, a Mr. De Clifford, whose son William, a lad of noble impulses but weak will, is made the central figure. The De Cliffords are Dissenters, but hold a prominent place in the little community. Through a chain of circumstances William is drawn into companionship with the rector of the Established Church, Fordyce, who is a man of strong character, and whose influence is of great importance in shaping the life and strengthening the character of the young man. The author aims to give a picture of certain phases of religious life in England forty years ago.

A history of the successful working of several coöperative enterprises among the coopers of Minneapolis. By the author of 'Icaria, a chapter in the history of communism."

Shaw, E: R. Selections for written reproduction; designed as an aid to composition writing and language study. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 102 p. D. cl., 56 c.

Divided into three parts. Pt. 1 consists of selections purely narrative or descriptive in character, experience proving that such are best adapted for beginners. 2. The selections contain quotations, and are more difficult of punctuation. 3. Contains material adapted to advanced grammar grades and classes in rhetoric. The selections are all from excellent sources, and mostly from contemporaneous writers.

Shaw, Flora L. Colonel Cheswick's campaign. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1886. 436 p. S. cl., $1.25.

Flora L. Shaw has written a number of delightful books for young people, notably "Castle Blair," "Hector," and "Phyllis Browne." Here we have a full grown novel, equally attractive in its way to old or young, well conceived and well carried out. Col. Cheswick's campaign is not one of war, but is planned most skilfully to help marry his beloved daughter to a man he trusts and regards with much affection. Ailsa Cheswick is an exceptionel girl, as her father is an exceptional hero; both characters are portrayed with much cleverness, and excite much sympathy. The colonel's death in the Egyptian war casts a shadow upon Ailsa's life which is scarcely lifted by the successful issue of her father's plans.

Shedd, W: G. T., D.D. The doctrine of endless punishment. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 8+163 p. O. cl., $1.50.

An enlargement of a paper published by the author, in the North American Review, for February, 1885. It is a strong argument in defence of the orthodox doctrine of endless punishment; the additions to the original paper are a brief historical sketch of the doctrine and the Biblical argument relating to it—which turns principally upon the meaning of Sheol and Hades.

Sheldon, Mary D. Studies in general history. Student's ed. Bost., D. C. Heath & Co., 1885. 14+556 p. maps and il., D. cl. $1.60

"This book is not a history" the author says, "but a collection of historical materials." Thus in Greek history it gives a bare chronicle of great deeds, pictures of buildings and statues, extracts from speeches, laws, poems. In the early mediæval period, during the crusades, through the Renaissance, the French revolution and the nineteenth century, studies are offered of the goverament, famous men and works, contemporary literature, etc., of the various leading nations. The book is particularly useful as a work of refereace for young readers. Handsomely printed and bound.

Sheldon, Mary D. Studies in general history. Teachers' manual. Bost., D. C. Heath & Co., 1886. 8+167 p. D. cl., 85 c.

Contains the answers to the questions given in the Students' edition, embodied in tabulations, and a running commentary of text, which may serve as suggestive for the discussions and summaries demanded by the class-room.

Sheldon, Mary D. Studies in Greek and Roman history; or, studies in general history from 1000 B.C. to 476 A.D. Bost., D. C. Heath & Co., 1880. 12+255 p. D. cl., $1.10.

"This book is not a history, but a collection of historical materials; it contains just the sort of things that historians must deal with when they want to describe or judge any period of history, and just the kind of things, moreover, which we Americans must constantly attend to and think about. In Greek and Roman history it gives bare chronicles of deeds, pictures of buildings, and statues, etc. From these materials you must form your own judgment of the Greeks, Romans, etc."—Preface. Ten maps, nineteen illustrations, a good index, and excellent questions make the book of practical use.

Shorthouse, J. H. John Inglesant: a romance. [Anon.] 6th ed. N. Y., Macmillan, 1886. S. (Macmillan's summer reading ser.) pap., 50 c.

Shorthouse, J. H. Sir Percival: a story of the past and present. N. Y., J: W. Lovell Co., [1886.] 123 p. S. (Lovell's lib., no. 832.) pap., 10 c.

Shorthouse, J. H. Sir Percival: a story of the past and of the present. N. Y., Macmillan & Co., 1886 7+300 p. D. cl., $1.

The reader is asked to imagine that this story was written in 1920. It is told by an old lady, who revives the memories of her youth, which was spent in an old English castle of the present day. The Duke and Duchess, her uncle and aunt, are charming character sketches; the hero, Sir Percival, is an ideal specimen of young manhood. The story is most romantic, and strongly imbued with the religious fervor and mysticism that made "John Inglesant" so notable.

Sikes, Rev. J. R. The Biblical reason why prohibition is wrong; or, what the Bible teaches with regard to the use and abuse of wine and strong drink; given in its own language; with brief notes and comments Loudonville, Ohio, P. H. Stauffer, [Rev. J. R. Sikes, Perryville, O.] 1886. 5–110 p. D. pap., 30 c.

An argument against prohibition, in which the author does not "advocate the saloon system, especially in the present state of abuse," but objects to the zeal which seeks to advance the temperance cause at the sacrifice of faith in the Bible; he substantiates his arguments by an analytical classification of all the passages of the Bible in which the words wine and strong drink occur, and notes with a brief discussion.

Skottowe, B. C. A short history of parliament. N. Y., Harper, 1887 [1886.] 4+345 p. D. cl., $1.25.

In a series of chapters beginning with the formation of parliamentary government (1295-1460), and ending with the parliamentary development of to-day, in which Parnell and his followers figure largely, the reader is given a succinct history of the English government in its House of Lords and House of Commons. Many of the chapters have a special dramatic interest, while all are made attractive to the general reader by anecdotes of the great leaders and orators, and incisive illustrations of their favorite methods of debate. The concluding chapters on "The Irish Parliament and the Union," "Men and debates (1760-1800)," "The old Tory ministry," "Parliamentary reform," "The age of Peel," "Lord Palmerston," and "Gladstone and Disraeli," will especially appeal to readers of to-day.

Sleight, Mary B. The house at Crague; or, her own way. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 362 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The story for the most part is devoted to the wilfulness which caused Blanche Braddington to leave her cottage home in Crague, and become a music teacher, a governess, and the wife of a wealthy man before she realized that she had wrought her own undoing. Here we lose sight of her troubles in the pretty little romance of Ray Braddington and Gane Penscroft; but when we again take up Blanche's affairs events seem to shape themselves more satisfactorily for Blanche and her first lover, Donald Keith.

Smart, Hawley. Bad to beat. a novel. Chic., Rand, McNally & Co., 1886. 190 p. D. pap., 25 c.

A novel with a strong sporting tendency It is not entirely taken up with racing matters, however, as so many of this author's works are; but making use of the Sepoy rebellion as a foundation upon which to build, it relates in vigorous, stirring language the adventures of the hero therein; and how, being "bad to beat," he came through it successfully, and was eventually united to a young lady he was principally the means of rescuing. It is a story that appeals to the masculine rather than the feminine mind

Smith, H:, D.D. Spinoza and his environment a critical essay; with a translation of the ethics. Cin., Rob. Clarke & Co., 1886. 179+244 p. O. cl., $3.

"The first division [the essay] of the present work, originally prepared by the writer for theological students, as a part of his labors in Lane Theological Seminary, having been solicited for publication, has been carefully recast, and in its present form is intended as a humble 'contribution toward a solution of the causes of modern doubt.' As it is now presented, it is designed to furnish some aid, not to the theological students merely, but to Christian ministers of all Protestant denominations, and to those intelligent laymen who sympathize and co-operate with them, by the pen, in lecturing, and in various other forms, in their efforts to defend the ark of God, 'the faith once delivered to the saints,' from the assaults of scepticism. With this intent, it was thought best to complete the translation of the ethics. True, the chief argument of Spinoza on the problem of the existence of God is found in the first part, but the ramifications of the argument reach to every part of the work."—Preface.

Biographical sketches, illustrated with many portraits and pictures, and grouped under the following headings: Inventors; Early statesmen and orators; Later statesmen and orators; Lawyers; Early military and naval commanders; Military and naval commanders of the civil war:

Pioneers and explorers; Reformers and philanthropists; Eminent divines; Physicians and surgeons; Scholars and teachers; Historians and novelists; Poets and essayists; Editors and journalists; Distinguished artists; Business men. Besides telling the events of the different subjects' life, a brief account is also given of their achievements and of their influence upon history. Although sent out in a brightly colored cover, like a juvenile, the reading-matter is more interesting to grown people.

Smith, Mrs. J. Gregory. Atla: a story of the lost island. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 284 p. S. cl., $1.

A poetic tale of life as it might have been on the lost island "Atlantis," concerning which Mr. Ignatius Donnelly recently wrote a learned volume. Mrs. Smith has been for years collecting material for a study of this wonderful antediluvian country, and has under the guise of fiction endeavored to embody an idea of its stupendous civilization, and to describe the awful cataclysm by which, according to Hindu geology, it was destroyed eleven thousand four hundred years ago.

Tells of the boarding-school life of Hetty Thornton, a studious, conceited girl and her various associates. There is one bad girl, for whose actions there seems to be no motive but innate wickedness. All the teachers are delightful, the principal especially so. Warm-hearted, mischievous, lazy Annie Forest, the school-favorite, will appeal to the affections of girl-readers. Has a very inviting cover.

Smith, Mary P. W. Miss Ellis's mission. Bost., American Unitarian Assoc., 1886. 6+199 p. S. cl., 50 c.; pap., 25 c.

Sallie Ellis, who is known throughout the Unitarian denomination as "the little mother of the Post-office mission," was born in Cincinnati, March 13, 1835. She lost her mother early in life, and when yet a girl business reverses swept away her father's entire fortune. Desirous to do something to assist him, she became a dancing teacher. Associating much with children, and ever on the alert for their welfare, she took very naturally to mission work. In 1873, then already a confirmed invalid—deaf, and afflicted with chronic dyspepsia, catarrh, and other troubles—she entered actively into missionary work in Cincinnati. For four and a half years, during a continual struggle with disease, this hero displayed the beauty of a most unselfish nature, and helped others in many ways to bear their loneliness and troubles with better grace. All her work was of an eminently practical nature, and she assisted quite as often those whose needs were of a material character as those who needed spiritual direction and comfort. Miss Ellis died Dec. 27, 1885.

"The co-relation of algebraic and geometric facts has been kept clearly and steadily in view. While each may be taken as pictures of the other, the former have generally been treated as originals, lending themselves much more readily to classification. Only natural logical order has been aimed at in the development of the subject; no attempt has been made to keep up the distinctions of ancient and modern, analytic and synthetic."—Preface.

Smyth, Rev. Julian K. Footprints of the Saviour; devotional studies in the life and nature of our Lord. Bost., Roberts Bros. 1886. 4–231 p. S. cl. $1.

This little volume does not attempt a complete narration of the events in the Saviour's life. "Its purpose is to present the Lord's humanity in its saving relations to men." There are nine chapters relating to "The footprints," "The Christ-child," "The carpenter of Nazareth," "The sympathy," "The temptation," "The sanctity," "The majesty," "The sacrifice," and "The eternal presence of Christ." The verses between the chapters are selected with great taste. There are also several explanatory notes that add to the value of the text.

Snead, T: L. The fight for Missouri, from the election of Lincoln to the death of Lyon. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 8+322 p. D. il. and maps, cl., $1.50.

Col. Snead gives as his reasons for writing this book: "Because it was my duty to write it; because, too, I fancy I know more about the events that are narrated in it than does any one who will ever take the trouble to write about them; and because I am the only living witness to many facts the remembrance of which ought to be preserved." He was a prominent actor in all the scenes he describes, being during the time the political manager of the St. Louis Bulletin. Besides the columns of the Bulletin, he has had many original and official sources of information open to him. It will be generally conceded that he has succeeded in his aim of telling plainly and impartially the story of the fight made by the slavery and anti-slavery parties for Missouri in 1861.

Spender, Emily. Until the day breaks. a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 54 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 514.) pap., 20 c.

Cecilia, the heroine, is a stately but womanly woman, the niece of a proud, worldly English rector. She is thirty when the story opens. She falls in love for the first time with Maurice O'Donovan, a Fenian leader. The author's sympathies are wholly on the Irish side of the question. She writes artistically, and works up her tragic story with skill. Cecilia's endurance, self-sacrifice, and patriotism are all taxed to the end. The Anglican rector, Marsden, his proud wife, loud daughter, and invalid son, the dissenting minister, the rich farmer, the discarded wife, are all excellently executed studies of English character.

Spender, Mrs. J. Kent. Both in the wrong: a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 60 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 544.) pap., 20 c.

A pleasant novel in which a pair of lovers separate in anger, only to discover years afterwards, when chance again brings them together that both were in the wrong. In dissevering their lives in the past.

Spender, Mrs. J. Kent. Trust me a novel. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 92 p. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 523.) pap., 20 c.

By the author of "Till death us do part," "Gabrielle de Bourdaine," and other novels of English life. The heroine of this story is the child of an English country girl, who elopes with her Italian music teacher; her parents die when she is only a little girl, and she is brought back to the farm to live with her uncle and grandfather; her impetuous southern nature, which she inherits from her father, is brought out in vivid contrast with the Puritanical narrowness and strictness of her mother's people. She seems born to misfortune, through the treachery of a companion she is expelled from school, and the story following her into society, causes her lover to doubt her, and finally give her up. The character sketching is excellent. "Miss Ferrars," a sceptical satirical old woman being quite in Thackeray's vein.

Stanley, Jane. A daughter of the gods. N. Y., Harper & Bros., 1886. 170 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 84.) pap., 25 c.
The incidents transpire within eight years. The scene shifts from Ostend to Boulogne and then to London. The "daughter of the gods" marries an intimate friend of her father's, concealing from him some facts in her life, that are afterward disclosed to him under a combination of circumstances, that testify of the author's originality of invention. The heroine is beautiful and good. The sketching of the husband's sister and cousins shows a keen sense of humor. The child "Mara" is very successfully drawn Stanton, Evan. Ruhainah : a story of Afghan life. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 5-272 p. S. cl., $1.

Time of story, the year 1859. Scene Herat and Cabul. Ruhainah has been carefully reared as a cherished daughter by Abdullah, a very old chieftain, and trusted adherent of the Ameer, at the time of the British invasion. The British Captain Bernard loves Ruhainah, and Abdullah gives her to him on his death-bed, at the same time telling him her story, which proves her related to "sister Lydia," the woman who some years back had been a good influence in the captain's life. The story is said to rest on facts. It gives a vivid picture of Afghan life, and makes clear many of the peculiar ideas, trials, and temptations of Afghan wives and slaves.

Stark, Ernest. Ed. Sommer, the Pinkerton detective; or, the murdered miser. N. Y., J. S. Ogilvie & Co., [1886.] 160 p. il. D. (Pinkerton detective ser.) pap., 25 c.
Scene of the murder is Norwalk, Conn. William Buchholz is arrested on suspicion, as he was with the miser killed, and himself gave warning to the police. The detective has himself arrested on the charge of forgery, and spends his time in the prison where Buchholz is awaiting trial, striving in many ingenious ways to gain his confidence and make him betray his knowledge of the crime. The result of this scheme is surprising.

"In depicting, under various forms, the strifes naturally arising between adverse private opinion and the church's teaching, and the struggles often occurring in parish life between the faithful pastor and the uninstructed layman, preference has been given in several cases to the narrative form in order to add interest to the discussion of principles and objections by associating them with personal characteristics and with the incidents and scenery of ordinary life."—Preface.

Stebbins, Genevieve. Delsarte system of dramatic expression. N. Y., Edgar S. Werner, 1886. 8+271 p. il. O. cl., $2.

An exposition of the philosophy and system of dramatic expression founded by François Delsarte. By a happy, judicious mingling of philosophy and drill-exercises the author has avoided making the book either too metaphysical or too mechanical. Miss Stebbins has supplemented the writings and teachings of Dalaumosne, Arnaud, and Mackaye (pupils of Delsarte) with her own many years experience in studying elocution at the Paris Conservatoire, and under various masters in foreign cities, and has drawn besides from additional sources, ancient and modern. There are sixteen charts, nineteen sets of æsthetic gymnastics, divisions and lessons, with headings, sub-headings, numbered paragraphs, etc., all arranged and classified with type of various sizes and differently displayed; an order of exercises for systematic practice, and blank pages for explanations and remarks, and an exhaustive index, so that teachers will find it excellently suited for class work.

The writer has gathered together in this work an enormous mass of new material which from its production in small magazines, local histories, proceedings of societies, and the works of specialists, is naturally inaccessible to the great majority of English and American readers. The author has endeavored, and, we think succeeded, in treating the subject impartially, systematically keeping down fine writing and over-elaborate description—blemishes which disfigure the works on this subject by all French writers—with the exception, perhaps, of Mignet. Not the least interesting portion of the first volume is the preface, in which the author gives considerable space to the books which have been written on this epoch, and an estimate of their authors. The first volume ends with the flight of the king to Varennes, the dissolution of the Constituent Assembly, and a chapter on the provinces and the colonies of France in 1790 and 1791. The second volume, which will bring the subject down to the death of Robespierre, will be published next summer, and the third volume, completing it down to the end of the Directory and the assumption of power by Bonaparte, next winter. Mr. Stephens is professor at Balliol College, Oxford.

The book, according to the sub-title, tells "How he (David Balfour) was kidnapped and cast away; his sufferings in a desert isle; his journey in the Wild Highlands; his acquaintance with Alan Breck Stewart and other notorious Highland Jacobites, with all that he suffered at the hands of his uncle, Ebenezer Balfour of Shaws, falsely so called." As may be judged, the book is one wholly of adventure, leaving off while the hero is still not much more than a boy. The style is very quaint and amusing. Scene laid in Scotland.

The evidence of a number of physicians and other intelligent persons who have resorted annually to the Adirondacks region for recreative or sanitary purposes is embodied in this little volume in the form of letters and essays. They all agree with Dr. Stickler's own experience, that the air of this portion of the country is the purest to be had in the United States and most beneficial to certain invalids.

According to the promise of the "Primer," which preceded this little volume, children are here introduced to real reading. The aim has been to provide stories and verses which shall have the same interest for them as the magazine has for grown persons, and yet be entirely suited to their small powers. The guiding principle has been the cultivation of a taste for reading, hence many of the selections are standard or classic; the remainder are in the simple narrative style. Many of the stories as well as the illustrations, which are notably good, have, by special arrangement, been taken from Our Little Ones.

This, though a book of laws, is not a "law-book" in the technical sense, but comes clearly within the scope of a general library. It is a statement, in concise but clear language, and in logical order, of the laws of all the States on every subject pertaining to the persons and property of citizens. It embodies a synopsis of the two hundred and fifty bulky volumes which contain the "written law" of our forty-seven States and organized territories. Its accuracy can be replied upon. The author having proved his ability for condensed and lucid statements of law in his well-known "Law Glossary" (published in 1881), has devoted five years to the preparation of this work. In addition to reading, comparing, and condensing the immense mass of printed laws, he has twice carefully verified every statement and citation in his volume.

Stimson, F: J., ["J. S. of Dale," pseud.] The sentimental calendar; being twelve funny stories. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 7+280 p. D. cl., $2.

Opens with a preface by the Major, showing how these stories came to be called funny; the twelve stories are apportioned to the months according to their significance. For January there is "The Bells of Avalon," a "story told in a winter storm at sea; following are: Mr. Pillian Wraye, agnostic necromancer; The seven lights of Asia, an Indo-European episode; A first love-letter; Bill Shelby; Two passions and a cardinal virtue; Our consul at Carlsruhe; Gloriana, a fairy story; Passages from the diary of a Hong Kong merchant; In a garret; A tale unfolded; Mrs. Knollys. Many of the stories are here printed for the first time. Others have appeared in the various magazines. Each one is headed by a charming little vignette from drawings by F. G. Attwood.

This work appeared two years ago in Germany. In the form of letters written by Mrs. Buchholz, it describes everyday life in the great German middle class. The same characters figure throughout the book, but there is no attempt at plot. Mrs. Buchholz is fussy, a match-maker, and meddler, who pours out her thoughts on all the occurrences of daily life with malice, envy, hatred, and all uncharitableness. Her quarrels with Mrs. Burgfeldt are very amusing. Mrs. Buchholz is supposed to write to a Berlin newspaper.

Stockton, Frank R. The casting away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine. N. Y., The Century Co., [1886.] 3–130 p. D. pap., 50 c.; cl., $1.

The remarkable fortitude and ingenuity of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine when wrecked in the Pacific ocean, and the wonderful way in which they reached their island refuge have already been the subject of much laughter by readers of the Century Magazine. It is pleasant to have the story in book form, and to know in the near future Mr. Stockton will explain the mystery still unsolved in the last chapter by a new story called "The Dusantes."

Stockton, Frank R. The Christmas wreck, and other stories. 2d ser. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 6+242 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Contents: The Christmas wreck; A story of assisted fate; An unhistoric page; A tale of negative gravity; The Cloverfield's carriage; The remarkable wreck of the Thomas Hyke; My bull-calf; The discourager of hesitancy (sequel to "The Lady, or the Tiger?"); and A borrowed month (East and West)

Stockton, Frank R. The late Mrs. Null. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons., 1886. 3+437 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The famous author of "Rudder Grange" locates his story in Virginia, and introduces several capitally sketched portraits of the Southern negro, and many graphic pictures of life and scenery in the old Dominion. The chief characteristic of the book is its humor; probabilities are entirely ignored, and every effort made to amuse the reader. Stockton's peculiar wit crops up unexpectedly in the most serious situations, making a burlesque of all sentiment. The story has a plot, nevertheless, turning upon love and marriage, and curiosity is most ingeniously kept on the alert till the very last page is reached.

The first issue of a new biographical series, written so as to interest all readers, but especially young people. It is intended to make the volumes strictly accurate and valuable, and to give the results of the latest research. Bound uniformly in red cloth, with medallions in black and gold, showing portraits of Washington, Lincoln, Grant, and Garfield. Each book contains an excellent portrait. By the author of "The life of Abraham Lincoln," "Dab Kinzer" etc.

Stoddard, W: O. Red Beauty: a story of the Pawnee trail. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1887 [1886.] 368 p. 1 il. D. cl., $1.25.

The author of "Dab Kinker" and "Among the lakes" has written another of his stirring tales of adventure. A story of real Indians always appeals to boys and in this volume the Indians do almost everything possible for Indians to do. The love-story is pretty, but subordinate to the interest of wars, intrigues, shootings, scalpings, detectives, and all that goes to make up a live story of live Indians.

Stoddard, W: O. Two arrows: a story of red and white. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 239 p. il sq. S. (Harper's young people ser.) cl., $1.

"Two Arrows" is the name of one of the heroes, a young brave of the Nez Percé Indians, whose pluck and foresight even at fifteen served to rescue a band of his tribe from starvation. The other hero is a white boy, "Yell O. Pine," or "Yellow Pine," as his familiars called him, who had come to the far West with a mining expedition. The lives of these two boys cross continually, each being filled with startling adventures with the Indians, adventures in search of game, etc

Mildred Catesby, the "faire damzell," has a career full of incidents. She is an English girl, born to wealth and a good social position, with a selfish invalid mother who has never shown her either love or care. Just as Mildred is "coming out" her brother's death causes her mother to seek the seclusion of the little French village of St. Vélac. Here most of Milly's romance is enacted, and a graphic picture offered of French character and French life. The scene afterwards changes to London, and Milly is made very unhappy for a time through her mother's desire to have her marry a man she does not love.

Mr. Sully's large text-book. "The outlines of psychology," published in 1884, gave such prominence to the application of psychology to education as to suggest the desirability of separating this portion from the main text, and issuing it in a cheaper and more convenient form for the use of teachers. The complete volume of the author's abridgment of the large work will be ready within a few weeks.

Sully, Ja. Outlines of psychology, with special reference to the theory of education. Reading Club ed., abridged and ed. with appendices, suggestive questions, and references to pedagogical works, by J. A. Reinhart. Syracuse, N. Y., C. W. Bardeen, 1886. 5+372 p. S. cl., $1.50.

The book adopted for the New York State Teachers' Reading Circle for the present six months. The original edition has been universally regarded as the first practical application of psychology to teaching. But it was too large for general use, and its illustrations and much of its matter were applicable only to English schools. This revision was entrusted to Dr. Reinhart on account of his valuable articles on kindred subjects in education, which have attracted much attention for their evidence of wide research, and for their broad treatment.

Sully, Ja. Teacher's hand-book of psychology; on the basis of the "Outlines of psychology." N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 13+414 p. D. cl., 1.50.

By considerably reducing and simplifying the statement of scientific principles presented in the "Outlines of psychology," and expanding the practical applications to the art of education, the author hopes he may have succeeded in satisfying an increasingly felt want among teachers--viz., of an exposition of the elements of mental science in their bearing on the work of training and developing the minds of the young.

Swan, Annie S. Adam Hepburn's vow: a tale of kirk and covenant. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 6+244 p. D. cl., $1.

Begins in the year 1038. The resistance of the Scotch Presbyterians or "Covenanters to the efforts of Charles Stuart to establish Episcopacy in Scotland is the background to a pathetic tale of domestic life in the village of Inverburn near Glasgow. Adam Hepburn's vow is one of bitter revenge against the government whose soldiers have ruthlessly killed his beloved wife

Swan, Annie S. Thankful Rest: a tale. N. Y., T: Nelson & Sons, 1885. 143 p. il. D. cl., 60 c.

"Thankful Rest" is an old Connecticut homestead inhabited by Joshua Strong and his sister Hepzibah, both unbeautiful specimens of grim, rigid, unsympathetic New Englanders. Seeking the shelter of their roof come a nephew and niece, who have been reared in a totally different atmosphere, and surrounded by love and luxury death having broken up their happy New York home. The effects of the hard, dull life of the farm that they are obliged to endure, and the lack of love in their relatives, is well described. Sickness and trouble, however, disclose the fact that "Aunt Hepsy" has a heart under her forbidding exterior.

The aim in teaching the natural sciences to pupils of ungraded schools should be not merely to put them in possession of a certain amount of scientific knowledge, but also to cultivate perception, comparison, and language. The plan is to secure individual work on the part of the pupil, and for this purpose the author has divided each lesson into four parts: (A) To ascertain the physical properties by inspection. (B) To find the uses by inquiry or observation. In (C) he has given a few facts not easily obtainable; and on the back of each page he requires the pupil to write a description in his own language, embracing all facts thus acquired and such others as his teacher may have given him

Symington, Maggie. The king's command: a story for girls; il. by Hal. Ludlow. N. Y., Cassell & Co., 1886. 384 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Mr. Curzon, an English soldier, has travelled through many lands with his twelve-year-old motherless daughter. He finally reaches England to be taken away from her at "the king's command." He appoints an old friend her guardian, but directs her to live alternately with two sisters of her mother, both Irish ladies of wealth and education. Dorothy has been very carefully brought up, and much that her cousins do jars upon her. Still she has a healthy, happy life. When she is twenty-one she comes into a large inheritance, which she uses for building a home for waifs and strays. Her marriage is romantic.

Tadema, Laurence Alma. Love's martyr. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 234 p. S. pap., 50 c.

A father writes the history of their mother's life to be read by her two children after his death. His story begins in 1866, and the conversations are true to the language, usages, and prejudices of that day. It is a story of human hearts, full of human faults and virtues. Both husband and wife were "love's martyrs," and of both might be said what the father says of the mother: "Nothing is true of her that is not good."

Taken by siege: a novel. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1887 [1886.] 2-294 p. D. cl., $1.25.

Rush Hurlstone comes to New York City from a country village to earn his living as a journalist. His first piece of reporting is interviewing the director of the orchestra at the Academy of Music about a strike that occurred during an engagement of Miss Helen Knowlton, who, it is said, is intended for Miss Clara Louise Kellogg. The hero falls madly in love with the prima donna and is her devoted slave for five years, when she is finally "taken by siege." The details of the life of a journalist, of theatre life, and of New York social life are well worked into a good story.

Taylor, W: M., D.D. Joseph the prime-minister. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 3-241 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Following in the line of so many notable predecessors, this work needs no lengthy setting forth of its merits. Dr. Taylor's "Daniel the beloved," "David, King of Israel," "Moses," "Elijah," and "Peter the Apostle," all of the series to which this volume belongs, are Biblical biographies written with exceptional freshness and picturesqueness. The story of Joseph as found in Genesis is given in the same style; the incidents of his life are described in a familiar, graphic way, which appeals to every one's fondness for a story, while at the same time a lesson is deducted from each successive step of his career. The book is "for the inspiration of the young, the support of those who are bearing the burden and heat of the meridian of life, or the solace of the aged."

Taylor, W: M., D.D. The parables of our Saviour; expounded and illustrated. N. Y., A. C. Armstrong & Son 1886. 7+445 p. O. cl., $1.75.

The much-loved pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle of New York City has collected this series of sermons on the parables at the request of members of his congregation. He acknowledges his indebtedness to Archdeacon Trench's exhaustive work on the same subject, but has treated the parables more popularly and endeavored to fit their lessons to the known needs of his congregation. Dr. Taylor's wonderful gift at word-painting is shown at its best.

Tchernuishevsky, Nikolaï G. A vital question; or, what is to be done? tr. from the Russian by Nathan Haskell Dole and S. S. Skidelsky. N. Y., T. Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 9+462 p. D. cl., $1.25.

This work was written in 1863, during two years the author was in prison in St. Petersburg prior to being sent into exile in Siberia by the late Czar of Russia, his crime being his liberal opinions and revolutionary sentiments. He is said to still be living in Siberia, a wreck, however, mentally and physically. "A vital question" can scarcely be called a novel, although cast in the shape of fiction, and having a heroine of exceptional originality. In her career is despicted the future of emancipated woman as the Russian Nihilists would make it. Divorce, free love, co-operation and other questions are illustrated through incidents of her career; she takes finally what was at that period in Russia considered a very advanced step, and becomes a medical student. She still practises her profession in Russia, being a real personage, as are the three men in this very discursive and radical work.

Tennyson, Alfred, (Lord.) Dora. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1887 [1886.] 31 p. sq. D. cl., $1.50.

W. L. Taylor furnishes all the designs for this handsome edition of Tennyson's pathetic poem. His rural studies were made in England, and are most graceful and artistic. Many cover a whole page, other are scattered through the text, or appear as appropriate head and tail pieces. The volume is the conventional small quarto, handsomely printed, on one side only of fine gilt-edge tinted paper.

The 15 il. are printed on one side only of heavy paper, the design encloses the verses. There are besides a title-page and list of illustrations. Bound in holiday style.

Tennyson, Alfred, (Lord.) Tiresias, and other poems. N. Y., Harper, 1885. 3-100 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 46.) pap., 25 c.

"'Tiresias' is, indeed, a graceful idyll, something after the manner of the earlier 'Ulysses.' But it is by no means the strongest poem in the volume. The lyrics which follow, 'The wreck,' 'Despair,' and 'The flight,' are instinct with nervous force and fire, and alive with many perfect lines which will linger long in the memory.... The volume contains another addition to the 'Idylls of the king, entitled 'Balin and Balan.' It is an introduction to Merlin and Vivien,' and though it has not the tense satiric force of that splendid poem, it yet possesses a grace and charm of its own. There are lines in it which recall the author's happiest moods.... The volume is one which all lovers of lyric verse will be glad to read and to own."—Boston Advertiser.

This cheery poem, written forty years ago, is superbly illustrated, through a series of original designs which encircle the verses, and also fill full pages, and which are reproduced by photogravure and illuminated by hand. The pictures carry out the spirit of the poem, which is convivial and seasonable. A fine portrait of Thackeray is given on Japan paper. The binding has a broad piece of mahogany veneer set in the front cover, which also has a design of the mahogany table encircled with vine-leaves.

A series of charming essays, several of which have delighted the readers of the Atlantic Monthly and other periodicals. Miss Thomas, who will be remembered as the author of "A New Year's Masque," has a poet's fine sense of nature in all its multitudinous aspects and its varied life, and the literary skill to describe clearly and adequately. The names of the papers show their range. They are: Nature and the native; A spring opening; Under the sky; The rain and the fine weather. The sensitive plant; Grass; A rumination; The fly-trapper; Running-water notes; Along an inland beach; A summer holi-night; In praise of the blackberry; Mondamin: The solitary bee; The return of a native; Autumn and the muse; Gossamer; Thistle-down and silver-rod; Where it listeth; Ember days; Flake white; Frost and moon-shine; Hearth-fire.

By the pastor of Harvard church, Brookline, and author of "Emmanuel church," etc. The twenty sermons discuss man's sinfulness and inability; atonement and expiation; retribution; the child and his dues; the pre-eminence of Christ; the limitations of evil; predestination; self-improvement; weariness in well-doing, and other subjects.

Thomas, Reuen. Grafenburg people; fiction but fact. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1886.] 291 p. Il. D. cl., $1 25.

The Grafenburg people are supposed to inhabit a little town in the south of England. On a slender thread of fiction the author gives much practical advice against sectarianism. He introduces two clergymen, one Episcopal, the other a Rationalist, and makes them work in perfect harmony in their efforts to improve their people and teach them to love God and man. The heroine is an ideal woman, who exerts a powerful influence for good.

Thompson, Maurice. A banker of Bankersville: a novel. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 6-323 p. D. cl., $1.

Bankersville is a thriving Indiana town. The "banker" is a subordinate character. Milford and Lawson are lawyers and partners. Lawson is a rogue, interested in all kinds of "rings" and "deals." Milford is conscientious and of literary tastes. The heroine studies law also and has many theories about woman's rights and proper sphere. After deciding which lover to accept, she rules her life according to his wishes. A murder trial introduces the Hon. D. W. Voorhees, "the greatest living forensic orator," to whom the book is dedicated

Many of the chapters of this handsomely and elaborately illustrated volume have already appeared in St Nicholas Magazine. "Marvin and his boy hunters," by Maurice Thompson, is the longest story in the volume, and is intended to teach boys a careful and intelligent use of the shot-gun. Besides this there are stories and essays on boating and boat-building, fishing, archery, camping-out, swimming, walking, amateur photographing, skating, tobogganing, etc. All are intended to promote a taste for healthful amusement in the open air. The various sports are treated by such well-known experts as Ripley Hitchcock, Charles Ledyard Norton, W. L. Alden, Daniel C. Beard, Frank E. Clark, and many others.

Some fifteen years ago Mr. Thompson began collecting from newspapers and ephemeral literature of the day such verses as suited his mood, or "seemed the utterance of a soul that had put its thoughts into song." When he had collected almost a thousand poems a friend suggested publishing them The work of editing has been difficult, but is very well done. The poems are classified by subjects. There is an index of titles and one of first lines. Many of the poems are anonymous, which Mr. Thompson thinks a great wrong to the authors. Print, paper, and binding are in excellent taste.

"The discussion begins with a description of the Semitic and Aryan families. The development of the marriage relation is then traced through Greek, Roman, Jewish, early Christian, Catholic, and Protestant civilizations to the present day. A study is made of the family as an institution, divine and human, and as the basis of social order. The authors then present some remarkable statistics as to the increase of divorce, especially in this country. The remedies suggested are a proper conception of woman's responsibilities, a higher standard of belief and practice as to domestic institutions, a restoration of the religious basis of marriage, and uniformity of law as to marriage and divorce."—*N. Thy kingdom come: a tale for boys and girls; by the author of "Little Snowdrop and her golden casket." N. Y., T: Nelson & Sons, 1885. 5-144 p. 1 il. D. cl., 60 c.

Deals with the trials of a young girl who loses her mother when she is about fifteen; her father is a scientific man, who looks upon her as "only a girl," with little knowledge or judgment. She becomes so helpful, however, with her young brothers, and is such a potent factor in the household, that before a long time her father recognizes her worth; her brothers' adventures and a couple of innocent love stories brighten the narrative.

Tidball, Mary Langdon. Barbara's vagaries N. Y., Ha-er, 1886. 2+175 p. D. cl., $1.

The scene upon which Barbara, an unsophisticated, beautiful North Carolina girl is first introduced is an immense hotel at Old Point Comfort. She has come North with an old uncle, who leaves her to herself. Her extravagant dress of many colors causes the ladies at first to fight shy of her, but one of them speaks to her kindly and teaches her to "tone down" a little. The girl falls in love with the lover of her friend, and to hide it does many odd things, and finally disappears. She is something new in the line of heroines. After many years Barbara is comforted.

Tolstoi, Count Lyof N. Anna Karénina; tr. by Nathan Haskell Dole. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 4+773 p. D. cl., $1.75.

Tolstoi is the well-known Russian author, and the writer of "My religion." The present story, which Mr. Dole has so admirably translated and furnished with an interesting introduction, was written by him in 1875. It is a most realistic transcript of fashionable life in Moscow, with all its vices and follies fearlessly laid bare. Anna Karénina is the wife of a high official, a man much older than herself and of few attractions, whom she has married, or rather been married to, without any pretence of love She meets a brilliant young officer in society, and a mutual love, with which both are inspired, is the beginning of her downfall. Her course after she leaves her husband for her lover is painful in the extreme—one humiliation after another, finally driving her to suicide. This is a mere outline of the leading motive. Besides we get the details of several intrigues and innumerable scenes and episodes illustrating Russian life in the city and country

Tolstoi, Count Lyof N. Childhood, boyhood, youth; tr. from the Russian by Isabel F Hapgood. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1886.] 9+381 p. por. D. cl., $1.50.

This is a novel in three parts, founded upon the reminiscences and traditions of Tolstoi's family, and the incidents of his own youth and childhood. It was written between 1852 and 1855, and was only intended as the beginning of a great novel, covering his whole career, that as yet has not been completed. This work is of particular interest, since it shows that many of the author's ideas of thirty years ago were precisely similar to those that he is putting in practice to-day in his own person.

Tolstoi, Count Leon War and peace: an historical novel; translated into French by a Russian lady, and from the French by Clara Bell. N. Y., W: S. Gottsberger, 1886. 2 v. 2+322, 2+357 p. S. cl., $1.50; pap., $1.

The author, who is an aristocrat and Russian to the core, has woven a thread of romance into this historically accurate description of one of Napoleon's decisive battles. His characters are well drawn, and he elaborates with artistic finish. The novel is a change from current fiction, which deals so almost exclusively with mental and moral phenomena. It is full of action. Many Russian secret societies are described, and the initiation of a member into one of the most exclusive of them is one of the finest bits of description in the book. The translation is smooth and idiomatic.

Tolstoi, Count Léon. War and peace. a historical novel. Pt. 2, The invasion, 1807–1812; translated into French by a Russian lady and from the French by Clara Bell. N. Y., W: S. Gottsberger, 1886. 2 v. 321; 2+270 p. S. cl., $1.75; pap., $1.

The characters of the first part of this romance, 'Before Tilsit," reappear. Pierre, the freemason and liberal, is again a prominent figure, re-united to his frivolous wife, and going a downward pace in spite of his ideal theories. The scenes are taken entirely from Russian high life, and deal with love and intrigue, and the threatened war between Russia and France. Napoleon and Alexander both appear upon the scene, the descriptions of the French Emperor not being at all flattering. France has invaded Russia and is marching upon Moscow when the story ends. As the fates of the various characters are left in doubt, there are probably more volumes to come.

Tolstoi, Count Léon. War and peace. an historical novel; tr. into French by a Russian lady, and from the French by Clara Bell; rev. and corr. in the U S. Pt. 3. Borodino, the French at Moscow, epilogue, 1812–1820. N. Y. W: S. Gottsberger, 1886. 2 v. 4+290; 2+391 p. S. cl., $1.75, pap., $1

To those who read the first two parts of this work "Before Tilsit" and "The invasion," the present volumes will be full of interest. It carries the story slowly on to an ending, the same characters appearing again. The historical part, which occupies more than two thirds of the volume, embraces the great battle of Borodino, the occupation of Moscow by the French, its burning, and the retreat of the French without again showing fight.

Towards the gulf. a romance of Louisiana. N. Y., Harper, 1887 [1886.] 4-315 p. S. cl., $1.

"A picture of New Orleans life, beautiful, vivid, and mournful, is contained in 'Towards the gulf.' The writer has marked powers of observation and description, and they find ample play in the haunts of creole life. The story turns upon the taint of blood, and is an awful sermon upon the miseries that punish the prejudices as well as the vices of men This cannot but detract from the artistic value of the book, which is all but perfect in form, and yet the interest is genuine and abiding, and the workmanship is refreshingly good"—Commercial Advertiser

Towle, G: Makepeace. Young people's history of England. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1886. 5+388 p. il: D. cl., $1.50.

The many able historical works that Mr. Towle has produced make him an authority, and although it would seem there was not a need for another history of England, this volume fills a place and a want. The autnor has another motive in addition to that of presenting clearly and concisely the main facts in the history of England from the Roman conquest to the present time, which is to show the growth of the political liberties and institutions of the English people, and to indicate in some degree the changes in the social condition, and the advance in literature and the arts. He has successfully endeavored to relate events and to describe persons, without bias or partiality, and to avoid obtruding judgments of his own.

Townsend, G: Alfred, ["Gath," pseud.] Katy of Catoctin; or, the chain-breakers: a national romance. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 2-567 p. D cl., $1.50.

Scene is laid in Maryland and around Washington This historical novel opens in October, 1859, just before John Brown's raid. The details of that expedition are given, and the death of John Brown vividly described. The election of President Lincoln, the civil war, the murder of Lincoln, the death of John Wilkes Booth, the trial of Mrs. Surratt, and all the leading events which led to and followed the emancipation of the slaves, have been cleverly used to make a story of great merit. Katy of Catoctin is a young, innocent girl, a descendant of the Pennsylvania Dutch, who becomes engaged to the hero after very short acquaintance and remains faithful to him throughout his troublous career. In the descriptions of life among the Tunkers, of natural scenery, and in the study of the characters of John Brown and John Wilkes Booth, Mr. Townsend shows his great versatility and strong English to great advantage. Quotations from the press of those days are skilfully worked into the plot.

Townsend, Virginia F. A. Boston girl's ambitions. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1887 [1886.] 3-395 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A story in which a young girl's indomitable grit is the motor which helped her combat sorrow and adversity, and gained for Caryl and Dorrice Dacre brilliant success. There are several mysteries and a quaint little romance, but the story is singularly free from sensationalism.

Traill, H. D. Shaftesbury (the first Earl). N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 8+218 p. S. (English worthies.) cl., 75c.

The subject of this monograph is the statesman of the Restoration, born 1621, died 1683. The previous biographies that we have had of him have represented him as utterly corrupt, or have endeavored to prove him a much-slandered man, and very near to perfection, morally. Mr. Traill has chosen a middle course, and aimed to show that he was at least no worse than his contemporaries. His estimate of the earl is summed up in the following paragraph: "Ambition and contentiousness, the love of conflict and the love of power, were the dominant impulses of his career and the all-sufficient explanation of his conduct. He quitted Charles I. for the Parliament, because he saw the avenues of advancement closed against him in the King's service. He abandoned the Commonwealth for Charles II. because he saw that a restoration was inevitable, and hoped by assisting to further it to lay the foundation of his political fortunes under the new order of things."

Apollonius was a contemporary of Jesus; it was claimed that he was divinely conceived, and that he came with a revelation as the Saviour of humanity; his written life tells of miracles performed by him in Greece, and of a religion preached by him advocating a morality and virtue far in advance of his age. Mr. Tredwell furnishes a most interesting biography of him based upon the narrative of Philostratus. His special aim is to show that the main facts in the history of Apollonius are as well attested as the life of Christ. Great care has been taken to describe the people and the countries through which Apollonius travelled as they were in his day; his philosophy, his religion, and his system of ethics are given as they came from his own lips. A prominent feature of the work is the bibliographical references. The work is handsomely printed by De Vinne; has broad margins and uncut edges.

Trouessart, E. L. Microbes, ferments, and moulds. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 8+314 p. il. D. (International sci. ser., no. 56.) cl., $1.50.

A number of works have been written on the subject of microbes, but they have all been prepared for the physician or naturalist, and take for granted that the reader is familiar with the ideas already established on pathology or on cryptogamic botany. This work, while it will interest and be found to have much of value for physicians and practical men, is written more for the general public—those persons, in fact, who possess only the elementary notions of natural science which are included in the course of primary instruction. The author hopes it may therefore find a place in the libraries of secondary instruction, and in public libraries, and may serve as an introduction to the learned works of Cornil and Babes, of Ducleux, Klein, Koch, Sternberg, and others.

Trowbridge, J. T. The little master. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1887 [1886.] 5–230 p. il. S. cl., $1.25.

The little master is a young undersized country boy of eighteen, full of natural talent and imbued with great force of character, who is almost self-educated. The book relates his experience as a teacher—first telling his adventures in getting a situation, his size and youth both being against him. He has charge the first winter of a country school and carries out with great success his theories of education; he especially objects to corporal punishment, and really obtains great influence over the boys by appealing to their intelligence and sense of honor.

Selections from the great writers of France. The work is used as a standard text-book by the schools of Paris, and is annotated in the most remarkable manner throughout with notes in English, German, and other foreign languages. It cannot fail of being of great value to all students of French. It will be published hereafter in New York by Mr. Jenkins, by arrangement with the author.

Two young boys are sent home from an Indian mission station and put in charge of Lady Laurie in her beautiful English country home. There is a resort that their father, the missionary, has been killed in the mutiny of 1857. Lady Laurie comforts the boys and makes them a happy home. The evenings are devoted to reading the life of St. Paul, and the conversations between mother and children make the story of the Acts very real to young readers.

Tulloch, J: D.D. Movements of religious thought in Britain during the nineteenth century. N. Y., Harper, 1886. 210 p. S. (Harper's handy ser., no. 60.) pap., 25 c.

The St. Giles lectures, fifth series. In eight lectures the author discusses "Coleridge and his school," "The early Oriel school and its congeners," "The Oxford or Anglo-Catholic movement," "Movement of religious thought in Scotland," "Thomas Carlyle as a religious teacher," "John Stuart Mill and his school," "F. D. Maurice and Charles Kingsley," and "F. W. Robertson and Bishop Ewing."

These two stories, like many others from Turgenieff's pen, were written with a purpose; which is to expose the corruption and moral degradation of the Russian nobility. In both stories the heroes inherit all their worst qualities from their fathers, who are nobles, and their virtues from their mothers, who belong to the peasant class. They are sad but graphic illustrations of Russian life fifty years ago.

Turner, Ross. On the use of water-colors for beginners. Bost., L. Prang & Co., 1886. 32 p. pl. Q. bds., $3.

There has been no attempt to follow the strict scientific order in which birds should be grouped. The sketches are instructive, but worded so as to interest very youthful readers. Twenty-four full-page illustrations. Appropriate cover and gilt edges.

Underhill, Andrew F. Etchings in verse. N. Y., Brentano Bros. 1886. 3-121 p. D. cl., $1.

A collection of forty short poems arranged under three headings—viz.: Songs in minor keys; Interludes; and Shreds and patches. The author uses French words freely. The minor key seems his favorite throughout. Handsomely printed on heavy paper, with rough edges, and bound in smooth, dark cloth.

Underwood, Francis H. A handbook of English history based on the lectures of the late M. J. Guest and brought down to the year 1880; with a supplementary chapter upon English literature of the 19th century. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1886. 14+614 p. maps, D. cl., $1.20.

While Guest's "Lectures on English history," prepared for the "College for Men and Women," in London, has always been considered one of the most complete, interesting, and impartial histories ever written, its enthusiastic English tone and its unpleasant redundancy of language made it useless as a text-book for American schools. The matter it comprised, however, was so extremely valuable that Mr. Underwood re-wrote the whole work, at the same time condensing it considerably. Mr. Guest had only brought his narrative down to the reign of George III., additional chapters consequently were necessary. Contains many useful maps.

Upton, G: P. The standard oratorios; their stories, their music, and their composers: a handbook. Chic., A. C. McClurg & Co., 1887 [1886.] 335 p. S. cl., $1.50.

A companion volume to "Standard operas," which work it follows as closely as possible in arrangement and general presentation of subject. Opens with a sketch of the origin and development of the oratorio as illustrated in its three principal evolutionary stages, together with descriptions of several works which are not oratorios in the strict sense, but at the same time are sacred compositions written upon a large scale and usually performed by oratorio societies. Following are sketches of the oratorios which may be called "standard," outlining the sacred stories which they tell, and briefly indicating and sketching their principal numbers, accompanied by a short biography of the composer and such historical matter connected with the various works as is of special interest. Being for the use of the general public, technical terms have been avoided as far as praticable.

Upton, G: P. Woman in music. 2d ed., rev. and enl. Chic., A. C. McClurg & Co., 1886. 7–221 p. S. cl., $1.

First published by Jas. R. Osgood & Co. in 1880. See notice P. W., Dec. 11, 1885, [465.] The plates were destroyed by fire. A renewed demand has encouraged the author to revise and enlarge his work. Appendix contains list of prominent female composers during the past three centuries, and a list of dedications made to women by composers mentioned in work, classified under composers. A good index. Neatly gotten up, with rough edges, clear type, and delicate head and tail pieces.

Urbanitsky, Alfred Ritter von. Electricity in the service of man: a popular and practical treatise on the applications of electricity in modern life; from the German; ed., with copious additions, by R. Wormell; with an introduction by J: Perry. N. Y., Cassell & Co., 1886. 27+859 p. il. O. cl., $6.

"Although there is no want at present of works and periodicals which treat of the science of electricity, it is not everybody's business to go through fifty volumes to pick out from amongst the useful and useless that which is needed, and finally to retain just enough to make up one volume. The task of saving the general reader that trouble I have undertaken, and have sought to convey a clear insight into the whole science of modern electrotechnics, without requiring on the reader's part any special knowledge beyond that of ordinary education."—Author's preface. Divided into two parts. The first is devoted to "The principles of electrical science," the second to "The technology of electricity." The second part is in two divisions. In the first division is given an account of machines for producing electricity and the various kinds of galvanic batteries. The second division gives a history of the electric light and the various kind of lamps, methods of lighting, etc.; also its use as a motive-power, with a history of the different machines; also a history of the telephone, telegraph, etc. A very full index.

Valdés, Don Armando Palacio. The Marquis of Peñalta (Marta y María); a realistic social novel; tr. from the Spanish by Nathan Haskell Dole. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co.. [1886.] 4-342 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The Marquis of Peñalta has been educated in the expectation of marrying María Elorza, the daughter of the chief family in a Spanish seaport town. When about of an age to marry, María becomes a religious fanatic. She belongs to the Romish Church and goes to mass constantly, makes her devoted servant scourge her, fasts and punishes herself in many ways. Finally she becomes a nun and the marquis marries her younger sister. The invalid mother is an excellent piece of character-drawing.

Valera, Juan. Pepita Ximenez; from the Spanish; with an introduction by the author, written specially for this edition. N. Y., Appleton, 1886. 14+273 p. S. pap., 50 c.; hf. cl., 75 c.

"The author was recently Spanish Minister to this country, and is recognized as one of the foremost literary men of the time in his own land. His fictions, some eight or ten in number, enjoy a wide popularity in Spain, and the story under notice has been translated into German, French, Italian, and Bohemian. It is a charming book, graceful and refined in style, and though simple in plot, prolific in interest and attractiveness. The characters are depicted with admirable skill, and the quiet and delicate tone of the story as a whole, together with the warm and spirited picturesqueness that characterizes it throughout, commend it to the attention of every reader of educated tastes."—Boston Gazette

Valerie; or, half a truth. Chic., The Illustrated Pub. Co., [1886.] 3-22 p. D. (Popular ser., no. 6.) pap., 25 c.

The heroine makes her début at a military ball given in Donnington previous to the Egyptian campaign; she meets and falls in love with Captain Beauregard, who returns her love, but does not declare himself because he learns of a boy and girl engagement between Valerie Herbert and Louis Charteris; Valerie goes to London for her first season and her affairs become very complicated; she breaks her engagement with Louis, flirts desperately, and refuses several eligible offers, before she acknowledges that she is untrue to herself in trying to conceal her love for Max Beauregard.

Vámbéry, Arminius. The story of Hungary; with the collaboration of L: Heilprin. N. Y., G: P. Putnam's Sons, 1886. 11+453 p. map and il. D. (The story of the nations ser.) cl., $1.50.

Professor Vámbéry, whose time has principally been devoted to a study of Central Asia, gives as his reason for entering upon a new literary field his desire to make American and English readers acquainted with the record of his native country, and to present the various phases of the history of Hungary in "the light best suited to attract the attention of the citizens of England and of the Great Republic to whose opinion we Hungarians are by no means indifferent." Like the other volumes of this deeply-interesting series, the book only deals with the salient events, the most noteworthy personalities, and the most thrilling episodes in a narrative which covers nearly a thousand years. Mr. Heilprin did the proof-reading of the work, and revised Professor Vámbéry's English where necessary. As the first story of Hungary written in English, this work is worthy of special attention, aside from its literary excellence and the high character of its author.

Vandegrift, Margaret. Ways and means. Phil., Porter & Coates, [1886.] 1+343 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

Muriel's mother had been a disappointment, because a boy was wanted. Muriel herself was a disappointment, but she was so fearless and energetic that after some years her grandfather almost forgives her sex, and on his deathbed leaves her his large house and $30,000 a year. Muriel fortunately gets Aunt Sally, whom we met in "Rose Raymond's wards," to live with her, and together they devote themselves to doing practical good to the neglected and down-trodden poor of a large city. Mrs. Vandegrift always encourages girls to be useful. A pleasant romance is interwoven.

Van Dyke, Jos. S., D.D. Theism and evolution: an examination of modern speculative theories as related to theistic conceptions of the universe; with an introduction by Archibald A. Hodge, D.D. N. Y., A. C. Armstrong & Son, 1886. 4-483 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The chief point sought to be proved is the existence of "mentality" as an entity distinct from matter. While conceding that evolution may give a new impulse to embodied Christianity, relieving it of some objectionable features, furnishing attractive arguments in its favor, and teaching the Church how to employ new agencies in the elevation of humanity, the writer has undertaken to present an argument against those forms of the evolutional theory which seem to tend toward atheism. He has endeavored to cover the entire field as connected with the origin of man, of matter, of force, of "mentality," of conscience.

Van Dyke, Theodore S. Southern California; its valleys, hills, and streams; its animals, birds, and fishes; its gardens, farms, and climate. N. Y., Fords, Howard & Hulbert, 1886. 4-233 p. D. cl., $1.50.

After long years of residence in Southern California—

not in its cities and seaports, but in its mountains and valleys and by its streams, camping, hunting, and studying the country, the author of "The rifle, rod and gun in California," and similar works, sends forth this book as the record of his experience and knowledge. It describes fairly and honestly all the advantages and disadvantages of Southern California for the settler, the farmer, the invalid, the climate-hunter, the fruit-raiser, the sportsman, the fisherman, and the traveller

Van Zile, E: S. Wanted—a sensation. a Saratoga incident. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 3-173 p. D. (Cassell's rainbow ser.) pap., 25 c.

The scene is laid in Saratoga; the story hinges upon the rivalry of two leading New York journals and their specials, Badger and Slushington, whose duty it was to supply their respective papers with news of this famous summer resort. A demand made upon Slushington and a desire to get the better of Badger led him to drug a detective, interview a noted gambler, expose a celebrated clergyman, and separate a betrothed couple before his ardor was rewarded and he scored one ahead of his enemy as well as supplied the "Sensation wanted" by the Morning Era. The author was for two years on the editorial staff of the Troy Times, and is at present connected editorially with the New York World.

Varley, J: Phillip. Sylvian: a tragedy; [also] poems. N. Y., Brentano Bros., 1885. 7+208 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The scene of "Sylvian," the tragedy which occupies 104 pages of the volume, is laid in Cordova, Spain, in the seventeenth century. The remaining poems are upon all manner of subjects. The author's versification is smooth, and his subjects interesting.

Veazie, G: A., jr. Four-part song-reader for upper grades of boys' and mixed schools; designed to follow the third reader of Mason's "National Music Course." Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 96 p. O. bds., 45 c.

The exercises and songs are arranged in soprano, alto, tenor, and bass, each part kept within easy limits. This limitation of range, which is secured without sacrificing the interest of the music, has been found to improve the carrying of the voice, and to be of special value for boys whose voices are nearing the transition state. The songs have been compiled with the utmost care, and are all new to our school-rooms, with one or two exceptions. They are of a high order, being selected from standard school-works of Europe.

Veazie, G A., jr. Music primer, for the use of teachers: introductory to first series Mason's "National music charts." Bost., Ginn & Co., 1885. 2-18 p. T. pap., 6c.

This little work is for the use of teachers in preparing their classes for the study of staff notation. Nearly all the exercises have been tested in the primary grades under the author's direction; and while they are intended as introductory to Mason's national music course, they will be found to be of value as a preparation in connection with other methods, not only for children, but also in teaching adult classes. The exercises have been confined within the limits of the scale proper, for obvious reasons.

The Venerable Bede lived in the seventh century and wrote an "Ecclesiastical history of Great Britain." Some passages of this work have been translated by the witty "Prig," and are used to prove the perfection of the English Church The satire is brilliant in many points

Ventura, L. D., and Shevitch, S. Misfits and remnants. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886 8+235 p. S. cl., $1.

Ten short, wonderfully well-told stories of the "misfits and remnants" of lives that have been cut into and spoiled by fate and circumstances. They are all met in the city of New York, and the author shows an intimate knowledge of the by-ways of this city, of its extremes of wealth and poverty. The titles of the tales are: "Peppino;" "Only a dog;" "Beppo;" "The Herr Baron;" "Our Nihilist;" "A Wrecked Life;" "The stage fiend;" "Graziella, the model;" "Who was he?" and "The elf of Hohenheim."

Vernon, S. M., D.D. Probation and punishment: a rational and scriptural exposition of the doctrine of future punishment of the wicked, as held by the great body of Christian believers of all ages, with special reference to the unscriptural doctrine of a second probation. Phil., J. B. Lippincott Co., 1886. 300 p. D. cl., $1.25.

From the author's standpoint future punishment is not only reconcilable with the love of God, but it grows out of that love and is a necessary form of its expression; it is an essential element in the divine administration, without which government could not exist; and it is an indispensable factor in the system of revealed truth. He further argues that this punishment must be endless in duration, and aims to show that the doctrine of probation after death, so much discussed of late, is refuted alike by sound reason and by the teachings of revelation

The story of the draft riot of 1863, in New York City, has probably never before been adequately told. The difficulties in the way of obtaining data for a trustworthy record have been very great. The author of this volume laboriously sifted the press reports for all material contained in them that was worth preserving. He also had access to the telegraph books of the Police Department, and has carefully examined the hundreds of despatches sent and received during the riot. Many of those have been quoted in full as a part of the record or as illustrating it. He has had help, too, from veteran members of the police force and city officials of the time, by officers of the volunteer and militia forces who were engaged in the struggle, and by citizens who were eyewitnesses of the events narrated. The author was then in the city, serving as a volunteer during the first two days of the riot, thereby obtaining vivid impressions which better prepared him for the present work. The book tells the whole story of those dreadful days of riot and assassination in a vivid, graphic way, making no statement that is not authentic.

W., G. E. Archie Digby; or, an Eton boy's holidays. N. Y., T: Nelson & Sons, 1886. 5–206 p. il. D. cl., $1.

Illustrates what serious consequences may result from small deceptions. Archie Digby goes to his uncle's to spend his Christmas holidays. Before he arrives at the house he has broken the dog-cart by letting the horse run away, and has made the groom promise to keep the matter secret a few days, till he can get money from home to have the wagon mended; and, again, he takes his cousin on the ice, on a part of the river they have been forbidden to venture on, and Cecil falls in and injures his spine. Added to this, the groom is sent away in disgrace, and Cecil's accumulated miseries bring him to a speedy repentance and confession. Things end better than might be expected, while the boys' sports and amusements give a bright side to the picture.

The revealing of a family skeleton, a ball, the plots and machinations of a confirmed cripple, a night in a haunted chamber, an incendiary fire, the death of the cripple, and the marriage of one of the three girl heroines are all crowded into one week, passed on the Scottish coast in the county of Galloway. The author of "Mr. Smith" and "The baby's grandmother" is at her best in this harrowing tale.

Walker, Francis A. History of the Second Army Corps in the army of the Potomac. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1886. 14+737 p. por. and maps, O. cl., $3.50.

Gen. Walker served through the war with the famous Second Army Corps, and writes, therefore, from personal knowledge; but, aside from this qualification, he was to an unusual degree fitted for the task of preparing this historical and personal account of the corps by his gift for vivid and powerful writing. In the first pages of the volume he says: "At the request of my surviving comrades I write this history of the Second Army Corps the one of the five original corps organized by President Lincoln, in March, 1862, which maintained its existence unbroken until the conclusion of peace, in May, 1865, and whose history is thus, in an unparalleled degree, the history of the war in the East; that corps which, in fair fight with Lee's great army, had captured forty-four Confederate flags ere first it lost a color of its own; that corps which, under the command of Sumner, Couch, Warren, Hancock, and Humphreys—illustrious roll!—left nearly forty thousand men killed and wounded upon the battlefields of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania; that corps among whose generals of division were numbered Sedgwick, Richardson, Howard, French, Barlow, Birney, Miles, Mott, Gibbon, Webb, and Alexander Hays." Excellent full-page portraits of each of the corps commanders in succession are given, and portraits in groups of the brigade commanders.

Samuel Rogers' well-known poem, telling the old legend of "Ginèvra," has been told in prose by Mrs. Susan E. Wallace, wife of General Lew Wallace, author of "Ben-Hur," who has illustrated his wife's work with pictures of real merit and original grace. The book is bound in boards, and gilt and color make it a showy volume.

The time of this historical tale is about two thousand years B. C., and the events recorded are supposed to have happened in the reign of Famenes II., the Pharoah under whom the Hebrews suffered the worst years of their Egyptian captivity. The "treasure-house" was built underground by the Hebrew slaves, who were afterward all put to death with one exception. This survivor, when dying from the effects of Egyptian cruelty, reveals the location of this mine of wealth to his son. This son and his sister, a wild, unprincipled dancing-girl, explore the underground passages and make themselves rich. A daughter of the former Pharoah, born of a Jewish slave, becomes the object of hatred to this brother and sister, and their plots and machinations to deprive her of her Egyptian lover are told with much dramatic power. The descriptions of ancient Egyptian manners and customs, and of the life among the degraded Jews of Memphis, are full of realistic and often horrible detail. The translation is remarkably well done.

Walworth, Mrs. J. H. The new man at Rossmere. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 4-359 p. D cl., $1.25.
Major Denny, of Rossmere, is a "Yankee," who comes South after the war, and settles in Arkansas. The time is that called the "carpet-bag" period, when prejudice and bitterness against the North were still rife and loudly expressed. The county ignores him for many months, the few freedmen on his place being his only friends. Finally accident brings him into contact with the people of a neighboring plantation, with whom his life henceforward is bound up. The influence Denny exercises over his neighbors, both in social and political matters, and the dense ignorance and hopeless poverty he finds around him, and which the author brings out very graphically, are paramount to the story of his love for the little Southern widow, whose husband had been lost in the war

Walworth, Mrs. J. H. Old Fulkerson's clerk. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 171 p. S. (Cassell's rainbow ser.) pap., 25 c.
Old Fulkerson's clerk cheats him out of a fortune and runs off to Canada. The clerk's wife and her sister are almost starving when an advertisement for a nurse to take charge of "Old Fulkerson" meets their eyes. The wife disguises herself and takes care of the irascible half paralyzed man for half a year. The scene is New York City. The plot is clever. The nephew of "Old Fulkerson," a rich, fashionable physician who lives with him, furnishes the romantic element of the exciting story

Walworth, Mrs. J. H. Scruples: a novel. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 3-191 p. D. (Cassell's rainbow ser.) pap., 25 c.
The "scruples" are entertained by Charles Warren in his Louisiana home at the outbreak of the rebellion, about fighting against his Northern countrymen. It is made so unpleasant for him in the South that he leaves and does lumber-work. His young wife is mysteriously sent for by him and goes away, leaving the baby with her uncle and cousin. The baby also disappears with the colored nurse. All ends happily. Gives excellent picture of the war in the South.

Walworth, Mrs. J. H. Without blemish. today's problem. N. Y., Cassell & Co., 1886. 3-381 p. D. cl., $1.25.
A contribution to the negro question, viewing chiefly, from several standpoints, the subject of amalgamation. The author's opinion is found in the following sentences put into the hero's mouth: "It is not by battering down the barriers with a reckless hand that the great problem of redemption for a race is to be worked out. Side by side, on platforms of an even elevation in morals and manners and good achievements, let them stand with the highest. Help them to it, sustain them on it, but not by obliterating lines traced by Omniscience itself." The argument is embodied in a very readable story of Mississippi after the war. The pictures are graphic though sad, and the character-sketches quite telling. The ending is tragical and cruelly unfair. Mrs. Walworth is the author of several good novels, "The Bar-sinister," published lately and anonymously, attracting considerable attention.

These "ballads" are sentimental, pathetic, patriotic, and humorous; they evince real poetic feeling, are musical in construction, and adorned by a graceful fancy and tender sentiment. Traces of Tennyson, Poe, Emerson, Shakespeare, and Will Carleton may be found in some of the poems, but others again, like "Jared Barnes' fiddle," "Passing away," and Civil war" show originality and a special individuality. The translations from Chamisso, Goethe, Schiller, Uhland and Sturm are faithful English renditions of the originals. The author is a Mormon, his verses, however, not being colored in any way by his belief. The book is illustrated by full-page pictures from the author's designs.

A simple, unsensational story of London fashionable life. "Doris" is an heiress, who imagines every man who shows her attention is after her fortune. She gives her hand and heart at length to one who she fancies loves her disinterestedly. Her marriage is in the first chapters, the book being the story of her married life, which is marred for a while by mutual coldness, suspicion, and jealousy.

The material for this interesting volume was gathered by the author during a journey made to Mexico in the early months of 1885, and from a careful study of a large amount of information relative to Mexico, derived from both public and private sources, which he found at his disposal on the completion of his journey. First contributed in the form of papers to the Popular Science Monthly, which excited both interest and discussion. A popular demand has induced the author to give them to the public in book-form. The little book is a complete though concise history of the present condition of Mexico, the extensive additions being especially in relation to the condition and wages of labor and the industrial resources and productions of Mexico.

This little hand-book begins at the beginning, and tells the young student of the microscope exactly how to proceed in his investigations, what to do, and how to do it, and the reasons therefor. Mary Treat has long been known as an interesting writer on natural history, and a valuable series published two or three years ago in Harper's Monthly was from her hand. Naturally she has had great experience with the microscope, and so, too, has Mr Wells, who gives suggestions as to outfits, preparation of objects, and methods of experiment. Mr. Sargent tells how home-made microscopes may be prepared and used.

Wellington, Mrs. A. A. By a way that they knew not. Chic., Rand, McNally & Co., 1885. 288 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The scene is laid in Chicago; the heroine is a fashionable belle of that city; after following her gay career and its attending disappointments, which are the indirect cause of her acknowledging her error, there are two pretty little romances, which conclude a story that is pervaded with a deep religious sentiment.

Wendell, Barrett. Rankell's remains: an American novel. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1887 [1886.] 5-316 p. S. cl., $1.

Rankell is a rich business monopolist. The story is told in three sections First, Rankell is described; second, the different people whose lives were influenced by him; and third, a great political convention, in which Rankell was wirepuller. The ending of the history would seem to be based upon the facts about the death and burial of A. T. Stewart, but Rankell is not intended for a portrait of Stewart The book has led to much discussion.

Wentworth, G A. Elements of analytic geometry Bost., Ginn & Co., 1886. 5+26 p. D. cl., $1.10.

Intended for beginners: as they generally find great difficulty in comprehending the connection between a locus and its equation, the opening chapter is devoted mainly to an attempt, by means of easy illustrations and examples, to make this connection clear. Each chapter abounds in exercises. The more difficult propositions have been put at the ends of the chapters, under the heading of "Supplementary propositions." This arrangement makes it possible for every teacher to mark out his own course.

Wentworth, Rev. J. B. The logic of introspection; or, method in mental science. N. Y., Phillips & Hunt, 1886. 446 p. O. cl., $2.

The author takes the ground that logic as the science of method is contained in and constitutes a part of psychology, and that, in so far, it is identical with it. An interesting work for students of metaphysics and those who wish to become acquainted with the entire plan of mental science.

Westall, W: The phantom city: a volcanic romance. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1886.] 8+288 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The Lancashire scene, clattering mills, and busy weaver folk, usually so conspicuous in Mr. Westall's stories, have no place in his last novel, which is based upon the legend of "The phantom city," believed by the Mayan Indians to be a great aboriginal city of Central America that is lost to civilization, and peopled by a race which held sway over that country before Columbus discovered the Western continent. Hearing this tradition, Dr. Carlyon becomes the motor of a Quixotic idea, and makes superhuman efforts to restore the lost city. Fantastic style, coupled at times with a humorous vein, is the most pleasing feature of the book

There is nothing denominational in this work ; it gives, as the writer says, from "the standpoint of a believer" in the Bible, a history of the Lord's day, and the biblical authorities for keeping it sacred.

Wharton, T: Hannibal of New York : some account of the financial loves of Hannibal St. Joseph and Paul Cradge. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. 2+326 p. S. (Leisure season ser., no. 2.) flex. cl., 50 c.
Hannibal St. Joseph and Paul Cradge are two millionaires, who have not scrupled at many crooked dealings to amass their fortunes. The wife of Hannibal St. Joseph is the leading character. Having deceived him concerning her past, when he married her, he never lets her forget that he no longer trusts her ; she is his slave and tool, and he is a most cruel taskmaster. He desires to conquer society, and her clever head is set to work ; with unscrupulous impudence, she routs her enemies and rivals, and soon takes a leading place in the fashionable world of New York and Newport. There is no special plot or motive, the book being rather a succession of scenes taken from social and business life, in which the worst traits of humanity are illustrated. By the author of "A latter-day saint."

This treatise has its origin in a belief that the time has come for such a study of school education as will ascertain the limitations of its maxims and the coördination and harmonizing of its apparently conflicting methods. It presents : 1, An analysis of psychical processes, and especially those involved in knowing. 2, A statement of the order in which the several powers of the mind become active, and their relative activity and development at successive school periods, with a graphic illustration of the same. 3, A presentation of the fundamental principles of teaching, carefully deduced from psychical facts, and tested by the best school experience known to the author. 4. The practical embodiment and illustration of these principles in general methods of teaching. 5. The application of these methods to the teaching of reading, language, geography, and arithmetic. 6. The statement and application of psychical facts to moral training.

A collection of short poems, the majority of which have a religious tendency, and are well worthy, as Mr. Stoddard says, "of preservation in future hymnologies." The whole volume is written with earnestness and feeling, though the subjects are old and familiar. Bound in parchment paper, with stampings of maple leaves in red, gold, and green.

Whitehead, Jessup. Cooking for profit: a new American cook-book, adapted for the use of all who serve meals for a price; originally published in the San Francisco Daily Hotel Gazette; [also] Eight weeks at a summer resort; our daily bill of fare, and what it cost. Chicago, Jessup Whitehead 1886. 4+125+222+9 p. O. cl., $3.

A work for hotel chefs, showing them how to set a fine table at the smallest cost. The first part relates to the different lines of eating-house business, and is a guide to various branches as carried on in the cities. "Eight weeks at a summer resort" is the diary of an experienced chef, cooking and stewarding at a summer boarding-house. He begins with a small family and few advantages for catering, and goes on to a crowded house, good business and plenty, putting down the cost of every meal, with the sums total shown at the end and the profit that was made. There is a different bill of fare every day, with a different soup or consomme, and 200 entrees and dishes with modern French names; about 30 ways of cooking potatoes, mostly fancy forms to serve with fish; a different dish of fish each day; about 75 ice creams and ices, as many cakes. The third part, "Artistic cookery," teaches ornamental work, wax figure and flower work for socles and pièces montées, and fancy sugar work, with illustrations to make it easy for any young cook to learn.

Whiting, C: Goodrich. The saunterer. Bost., Ticknor & Co., 1886. 10+302 p. il. S. cl., $1.25.

For three years, from 1878 to 1881, Mr. Whiting, in the character of the "Saunterer," found many readers in his special department in the Sunday edition of the Springfield Republican. The short pieces in prose and verse, in which he followed in desultory fashion the course of the New England year, are full of keen observation and an ardent love of nature. A few other studies have been added to those already published, showing the insight of a man of the world for the failings of humanity.

Wilcox, Marion. Real people. N. Y., White, Stokes & Allen, 1886. 3-247 p. S. cl., $1.

Marion Wilcox is Counselor at Law, was formerly associate editor of the New Englander and instructor in Yale University. Six stories of decided originality make up the book for which he has chosen the title "Real Folks;" "A Spanish-American engagement;" "Bertram Born;" "A Keepsake;" "Pasifal, Paul, and Pauline" which gives a vivid description of the rendering of "Parsifal at Beyreuth in 1882; "Good-by to Common Sense" and "Concha Casablanca." The author shows scholarship, travel and a keen sense of the ridiculous. Very daintily gotten up.

Wildenbruch, Ernst von. The master of Tanagra: a sculptor's story of ancient Greece; from the German by Marie, Baroness von Laner. N. Y., B. Westermann & Co., [1886.] 2+292 p. S. pap., 40 c.

The story is couched in the language of ancient Greece, which may appear extravagant to the prosaic people of the XIXth century. The scene alternates from Tanagra to Athens. Art is the motor which causes Myrtolaos to leave the land of his adoption, but love is the cause of his return, finding his proper sphere and becoming "Master of Tanagra."

Wilkeson, Frank. Recollections of a soldier in the army of the Potomac. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1887 [1886.] S. cl., $1.

The writer enlisted in 1861, and served until 1864, as a volunteer; then entered the regular army. He thinks the reports of the war thus far written inaccurate and largely biased by jealousy, etc. Not being generally written by officers, they do not reflect the private soldier's duties and sufferings. He praises the work of Gen. Grant, but is very critical of most of the books thus far written, and feels that it is his duty and mission to correct false impressions and prejudices against those in authority, whom he calls "civilians not soldiers."

Winchell, Alex. Geological studies; or, elements of geology; for high schools, colleges, normal and other schools. Chic., S. C. Griggs & Co., 1886. 24+513 p. il. D. cl., $3.

The work approaches the elementary facts and conceptions of geology from the inductive side. This, without question, is the natural and most pleasing method; and it is specially suited to students of immature years. The method introduces the learner first to the most familiar facts—pebbles and bowlders, the common kinds of minerals and rocks, drift phenomena at large springs and wells, sediments and erosions, strata and fossils. All these things he is expected to observe in the field. It leads him then by degress over the inductive evidences of internal heat, metamorphism, disturbance, upheaval and subsidence, and thus to the broader generalizations of the science. In this part of the work occur features thought to be peculiarly practical and welcome—such as tables constructed like those well known in botany for the determination of common minerals and rocks; particular descriptions and illustrations of the external and internal characters of genera of corals and shells common in the drift, showing the student how to manipulate, prepare and determine them and ending with tabular synopses The second part is a compact, systematic review of the subject, bringing into order the matter of the first part, and supplying further information in the several departments. Here the student will be glad to find tables of geological equivalents—American and European; superior geological maps, and others illustrating the growth of the continent, together with various other new expedients which teachers will appreciate. The treatment will be found original and fresh, the matter largely from American geology, with full use of all the lately reported materials, and illustrated by beautiful cuts, mostly new to text-books.

Wingate, G: W. Through the Yellowstone Park on horseback. N. Y., O. Judd Co., 1886. 4-250 p. il. map, D. cl., $1.50.

An account of a trip through the Rocky Mountains made last summer by the author, his wife, and eldest daughter. The latter, a young lady of seventeen, had been quite ill the previous winter from an affection of the lungs, and had been advised that exercise and open-air life at a high altitude would remove all traces of the disease—a result which was fully accomplished by the trip. Besides interesting personal adventures and incidents of camp life, contains descriptions of the beautiful scenery, game, and flora of the Park, and its many natural wonders. Chapters are devoted to distances and time table for a tour through the Park, and necessary outfit.

Bost., Cupples, Upham & Co., 1886. 3–144 p. il. and map D cl., $1.75.

An account of a party that went up into the Winnipeg country in 1860 to witness an eclipse of the sun. Two were astronomers sent by the Government, the third a naturalist on the lookout for specimens for a university museum. Their adventures were novel and exciting, and their privations numerous. They went through a new country, of which little was known in those days, and the account of which even now is both valuable and interesting. The author is said to be Prof S. H. Scudder of Cambridge.

Winslow, Margaret E. Cherie s answered prayer: a story of Southern France. Phil., Presb. Bd of Pub., [1886.] 285 p. 1 il. S. cl., $1.

This delightful narrative takes the reader into the very midst of the descendants of the brave old Protestants known to history as Waldenses or Vaudois. The story is suggested by letters to the author from an Evangelical pastor in the South of France, and the incidents and reform movements are all real, though wrought into the form of a tale, in order that the lessons may be made more attractive to young people, and so may more deeply impress them. The book is one that may be safely and strongly commended both for the home and for the library.

Mr. Fitzallan gives his Sunday-school class of a dozen girls and boys the text "To me to live is—," telling each one honestly to fill out the blank by Sunday next. One finds that life to him is—smoke, another pleasure, another dress, etc. Grace Dillingham confesses the wish to be good, and the story relates her efforts toward self-control and unselfishness, until she is able to fill up the text in St. Paul's words. There is a pretty love story interwoven and the book is suitable for the older boys and girls in Sunday-schools.

The gossip and love affairs of a little English country town, with the manœuvres of scheming mammas to marry their daughters and to get into society, are the themes of this bright, clever little story. It has all the attractiveness of the author's other stories—"Mignon," "Houp-La," etc.—and shows the same intimate knowledge of English army life.

This book begins a series which has been carefully graduated in both matter and language; the first reader is especially adapted to the wants of small children, and attempts to teach them something about the animals which come under their direct observation, and to pave the way to the scientific classification introduced in the higher books. The entire series can be used in teaching class subject, or is in every way fitted to serve the purpose of the ordinary reading book.

Wood, Rev. J. G. Second natural history reader. Bost., Boston School Supply Co., 1886. 132 p. il. S. (Boston school ser.) cl. net, 30 c.

This series is carefully graduated, both as to matter and language: the lists of words for spelling are selected with due regard to actual experience of children's difficulties. The forty-three short lessons of this volume go into brief details of birds, snakes, fish, the frog, toad, snail, fly, mouse, rat, squirrel, bat, etc. Nicely illustrated.

The chapters are entitled: 'Fairyland among the sponges,' "Homes under the sea," "Some wonders of the sea," "The most gifted insect race," "The marvels of insect life" "About spiders and their webs," "Some noxious insects," "Dragon-flies," and "The horse and his structure." Simply written and fully illustrated.

The binding is characteristic, the book fully illustrated and will make a good text-book for beginners.

"The author has traced the life of a bright and mercurial little fellow from the cradle, through childhood up to manhood, showing how, despite the overflow of vitality that kept him in hot water a great deal of the time, he had the right stuff in him, and came out eventually at the top. The author does not believe in family whipping, and a part of the moral of the book is to show the uselessness of such so-called 'discipline.' The book is for grown readers, and contains much food for thought, aside from its interest as a story. It is brought out in handsome form."—Boston Transcript.

This charming story, by the author of "Anne," was begun in Harper's Magazine almost eighteen months ago. From its first chapters the story of its leading characters has been followed by many eager readers. It is a story of Florida before and during the late war, and excels in its realistic pictures of Southern types of character. It is a story too full of pathos, with an ending that will disappoint most novel readers.

These plates are intended to give designs for cheaply built houses with ample veranda room suitable for a warm climate or summer use. With one or two exceptions they will not exceed in cost $6000.

Wright, Henrietta Christian. Children's stories of American progress; il. by J. Steeple Davis N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1880. 7+333 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

On the same plan as the author's "Children's stories in American history." Narrates in a way that young people can comprehend "The beginning of Western settlement," "The Barbary pirates," "The purchase of Louisiana," "The expedition of Lewis and Clarke to the Pacific Ocean," the story of "The first steamboat," "The battle of Tippecanoe," "The war of 1812," "The purchase of Florida," "The story of slavery," "The story of the telegraph," "The discovery of gold," and other events in the history of our country. Adorned with 12 full-p. il.

Wright, J: A. People and preachers in the Methodist Episcopal Church. by a layman.

[Anon.] Phil., J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1886. 3-314 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The organization and polity of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America is made a special study by the author, his object being to show points in government to which there is a strong opposition by the laity, and to suggest methods of reform. The book is principally published to open up the whole question and prepare the minds of the people for its discussion at the General Conference to be held in 1888.

Wright, Julia McNair. Graham's laddie: a story of God's providence. Phil., Presb. Bd. of Pub., [1886.] 2-334 p. map. D. cl., $1.25.

The story opens in a little obscure fishing hamlet—Kill Eda. There has been a wreck, and the brave fishermen go out to the dismantled hull, where one of them finds a baby tied to the rigging. In the little hamlet every house is so crowded that the waif at first seems likely to find no home; but a place is made at last for him by a good couple. On the breaking up of his home by death the lad sets out for Glasgow to find Mr. Murdock, a scientific gentleman, whom he had served one summer, helping him in his geological researches. The story of the long journey is full of pathetic interest In London, to which city he finally drifts, he is strangely reunited to his mother and sister.

Wright, Julia McNair. The making of a man, the story of Rasmus. N. Y., The National Temp. Soc. and Pub. House, 1886. 326 p. il., D. cl., $1.25.

"Rasmus" belonged to the "rough diamond" type of humanity; he first saw light in the slums of N. Y. City; his father was a stone-mason who fell a victim to intemperance, and his mother died of grief, leaving "Rasmus" a little brother to care for; the boy fulfilled this trust until an accident sent him to the hospital and he lost all trace of Robin; he then determined to tramp all over the country until he found his brother; after Herculean efforts he succeeds and is happily reunited with Robin. As usual the author has aimed to show up the wrongs brought about by intemperance

Wright, Julia McNair. Roland's daughter, a nineteenth-century maiden. Phil., Presb Bd. of Pub., [1886] 316 p. D. cl., $1.25.

In order to show up the evils of intemperance, Margareth Roland's sphere is cast in a family where it is the reigning vice; our heroine wins the admiration of the reader in the way she combats the many troubles brought upon her by a drunken father and brother, who finally fall victims to their besetting sin, and leave Margareth free to enjoy her pretty little romance.

Wright, W: Burnet. Ancient cities: from the dawn to the daylight Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 9+291 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The author is pastor of the Berkeley Street Church, Boston He dedicates his book to his wife, "at whose request these stories of the past were told." Each of the thirteen cities has been selected, either because its history appears to illustrate pointedly some utterance of Christ, or, because the manner in which it aided in preparing for the "New Jerusalem" is obvious. The cities chosen are "Ur, the city of saints;" "Nineveh, the city of soldiers;" "Babylon, the city of sensualists;" "Memphis, the city of the dead;" "Alexandria, the city of the creed-makers;" "Petra, the city of shams;" "Damascus, the city of substance;" "Tyre, the city of merchants;" "Athens, the city of culture;" "Rome, the city of law-givers;" "Samaria, the city of politicians;" "Susa, the city of satraps;" "Jerusalem, the city of the Pharisees;" "New Jerusalem, I. The city of God;" "New Jerusalem, II. The King."

Wyman, Lillie Chace. Poverty grass. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886. 7+320 p. S. cl., $1 25.

A collection of stories, many of which have appeared in the Atlantic Monthly, showing an intimate acquaintance with mill life in New England. They are called "Hester's dower" "Saint or sinner," "Luke Gardiner's love," "The child of the state," "A stranger yet at home," "And Joe," "Bridget's story," and "Valentine's chance." An intense purpose will be found in all of them, the author aiming not merely to show the features and causes of the misery of the mill operatives, but to enlist the sympathy of society that their lot may be bettered. The writer explains that she has called her book by the name of the grass which gains nourishment from the sands wherein other plants perish, as typical of the brave, sturdy people she describes.

In 1719 the ambition of Elizabeth, second wife of Philip V. of Spain, involved that country in war with France, England, and Austria. At this juncture the Count De Bourke was transferred from the Spanish to the Swedish embassy; his family left France to rejoin him and encountered many perilous adventures, one of which proved the heroism of Estelle De Bourke and gave the story its name, "The modern Telemachus."

Zeller, E: Outlines of the history of Greek philosophy; tr. by Sarah Frances Alleyne and Evelyn Abbott. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1886. 14+363 p. D. cl., $1.75.
Dr. Zeller is Professor of Philosophy at the University of Berlin He has himself written the preface for this translation, in which he says: "My object has been primarily to provide students with a help for academical lectures, which would facilitate preparation, and save the time wasted in writing down facts, without interfering with the lecturer's work, or imposing any fetters upon it. Hence I have made it my task to give my readers a picture of the content of the philosophical systems, and the course of their historical development, which should contain all the essential traits—and also to put into their hands the more important literary refesences and sources." Miss Sarah Frances Alleyne died while translating the work, and her co-laborer, Evelyn Abbott, has written a tender tribute to her memory, which appears in the volume. Full index.

Dr. Jost was born at Burnburg, in the Duchy of Anhalt, Feb. 22, 1793, of Jewish parents. He studied at Göttingen and Berlin, and became a teacher in the latter place in 1816. Later he removed to Frankfort a. M., where he died in 1860. His chief work was the "Geschichte der Israeliten" in nine volumes, written in 1820-'28. His ideas as to the origin of Christianity involved him in long and bitter discussions with the leading rabbis of his day. He also translated the entire Mishna into German, and wrote many books relating to the history of the Jews

New Books Issued in 1886.

A. C. McCLURG & COMPANY.

William Shakespeare. Translated from the French of Victor Hugo, by MELVILLE B. ANDERSON, M.A. 8vo, gilt top. 424 pages, $2.00.

"This is much more than a study of Shakespeare. All history, all theology, and all philosophy are grasped and handled with titanic force, the bard of Avon furnishing the text, or, as we should say, the pretext, for magnificent speculation. Why has this great work of Hugo's never before been Anglicized?"—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The Aztecs. Their History, Manners, and Customs. By LUCIEN BIART. Translated from the French by J. L. GARNER. Illustrated, 8vo, 340 pages, $2.00.

"This is a brilliant description of Mexico as it was at the time of the Spanish conquest. It is a book well worth reading and keeping."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Specimens of English Prose Style. From Malory to Macaulay. Selected and Annotated, with an Introductory Essay, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, xlvi and 367 pages, $2.00.

"In this volume of 'Specimens of English Prose Style' Mr. Saintsbury is seen at his best. The selection is comprehensive and well made; the annotations are always intelligent, and are sometimes as good as such things can be; the introduction, an essay on the nature and development of English Prose style, is in the author's happiest vein."—London Athenæum.

The Standard Oratorios: Their Stories, their Music, and their Composers. A Handbook. By GEORGE P. UPTON. Uniform with "The Standard Operas." 12mo, 335 pages, yellow edges, $1.50; gilt edges, $2.00.

"Mr. Upton has produced an admirable handwork, which answers every purpose that such a volume is designed to answer, and which is certain to be popular now and for years to come."—Eve. Mail and Express, N. Y.

Women in Music. By GEORGE P. UPTON. 16mo, 221 pages, $1.00.

"A wholly attractive book, carefully studied and well written, and fills a place occupied by no other work."—Saturday Evening Gazette, Boston.

Whist Scores and Card-Table Talk. With a Bibliography of Whist. By RUDOLF H. RHEINHARDT. Illustrated, 12mo, 310 pages, gilt top, $1.50.

"The main idea of Mr. Rheinhardt was to prepare a book in which scores could be preserved, and to include with the prepared blanks an interesting variety of historical and other data pertaining to cards. . . . . It is not a repetition of anything that is included in card literature; it fills a place that none of the several other volumes has pre-empted."—Brooklyn Citizen.

Home-Life of Great Authors. By HATTIE TYNG GRISWOLD. 12mo, 385 pages, $1.50.

"No such excellent collection of brief biographies of literary favorites has ever before appeared in this country. Mrs. Griswold's taste and discretion are as much to be admired as her industry in the composition of these delightful sketches."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Four Centuries of Silence; or, From Malachi to Christ. By Rev. R. A. REDFORD, M.A., LL.B. Crown 8vo, 258 pages, $1.50.

"It fills a gap in the history of religious thought—especially for those who have not the means of exploring the wide field of recent criticism of which this volume is the condensed thought."—British Quarterly Review.

The Sleeping World, and Other Poems. By LILLIEN BLANCHE FEARING. 16mo, $1.00.

"The versification is unstrained, easy, and graceful. The diction is pure and simple. The art is of the kind which conceals art. There is real feeling and true aspiration in all these verses."—Chicago Evening Journal.

Haschisch. A Novel. By THOROLD KING. 12mo, 314 pages, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

Mr. Desmond, U.S.A. By JOHN COULTER. 12mo, 244 pages, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

A. C. McCLURG & CO., Chicago.

PRACTICAL BANKING. Third Edition.

BY ALBERT S. BOLLES,

Editor of The Banker's Magazine, and Professor of Mercantile Law and Practice in the Wharton School of Finance and Economy, University of Pennsylvania. This work is designed to show how the business of Banking is conducted at the present time. It is not a history and contains no theory, but is a thoroughly practical work, the duties of all the officials being fully described. It is divided into four parts, with an appendix. The Banker's Common-Place Book has long been favorably known and the demand for a new edition has been very general. A portion of this standard treatise, revised to suit the present time, is included in this volume. 316 pages, octavo. Price, Three Dollars.

Bibliographical Publications

ISSUED FROM THE OFFICE OF THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY.

THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY,

Established in 1872, with which was incorporated the American Literary Gazette and Publishers' Circular (established in 1852), by purchase from Mr. George W. Childs, is recognized as the representative of the publishing and bookselling interests in the United States.

The central feature of the paper, which makes it an indispensable aid to the trade, to libraries, and to literary people, is its Bibliographical Department. Every possible facility of reference is afforded by a combination of methods which records the books, by the week, the month, the season, and the year, under the author, the publisher, the title, the subject, and the class. It is acknowledged that no other journal, at home or abroad, supplies as practical and satisfactory a record of the publications of its country.

The Literary Department includes comprehensive intelligence as to books forthcoming and publishing movements, at home and abroad, gathered with the aid of representatives in other cities; editorial discussions on book and trade subjects, as copyright, postal questions, book production and manufacture, etc.; original contributions and representative extracts on like topics; notes on authors; journalistic notes; business notes; literary and trade notes, etc. $3.20 per year, 10 cents per number.

THE LITERARY NEWS.

An Eclectic Review of Current Literature. Illustrated. Published monthly, and containing the freshest news concerning books and authors; lists of new publications; reviews and critical comments; characteristic extracts; sketches and anecdotes of authors; courses of reading; bibliographical references; prominent topics of the magazines; prize questions on choice books and other literary subjects, etc., etc.

The Literary News, since its establishment under the name of The Literary Bulletin, in 1868, has passed through many transformations in appearance and method before acquiring the distinctive features which have given it a character of its own, and which have become so familiar to thousands of readers. In substance it has been the same since its inception—"a monthly record of current literature;" but while primarily fulfilling its mission in the interests of the book-trade, it has since the establishment of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, which now so thoroughly covers that ground, aimed more directly to meet the wants of readers and students.

In its 32 pages monthly, it aims to give readers, in the briefest possible space, and in the shortest possible time, the widest possible information about all the new books. It is illustrated with portraits of authors, fac-similes of manuscripts, and pictures from the newest illustrated books. A complete index, by authors, titles, or subjects, makes the annual volumes accessible for permanent reference. $1 per year.

THE LIBRARY JOURNAL.

Official Organ of the American Library Association. Edited by CHARLES A. CUTTER, Librarian Boston Athenæum, and R. R. BOWKER.

The Library Journal was established in 1876 by the coöperative efforts of the leading librarians on both sides of the Atlantic. Its chief object is to be a practical help to the every-day administration of both large and small libraries, and to effect a saving by enabling library work to be done in the best way, at the lowest cost. The Journal especially meets the needs of the smaller libraries, offering them the costly experience and practical advice of the largest. In refraining from doing imperfectly what is done so well by the several journals specially devoted to antiquarian or purely historical interests, the Library Journal is enabled to give its chief attention to modern bibliography and current library matters, as represented particularly in its departments of "Bibliography" (proper), "Library Economy and History," "Catalogs and Cataloging," "Anonyms, Pseudonyms, etc.," and "Librarians." Published monthly, $5 per year; 50 cents per number. The Literary News, (monthly) and Index to Periodicals (quarterly) are included in this price as supplements.

INDEX TO PERIODICALS.

Quarterly Coöperative Index to Current Numbers of Leading Periodicals. Edited by W. I. FLETCHER, Librarian Amherst College.

This periodical, which with 1885 became a separate quarterly, indexes in each issue nearly a hundred leading periodicals, American and English, for the three months preceding, on the plan of Poole's Index. It is edited by Mr. Poole's collaborator in that work, and has been planned with Mr. Poole's sanction. The indexing to the periodicals is done by Librarians, on a coöperative plan, largely by those who supplied the material for Poole's Index, and it is believed it will be found of great service to librarians, students, and readers in general. The price is $2 per year.

THE AMERICAN CATALOGUES.

The original American Catalogue of Books in Print and for Sale (including Reprints and Importations), July 4, 1876, compiled by F. Leypoldt and Lynds E. Jones, aimed to present, for the first time, all the bibliographical features of the books in the American market, arranged in the first volume alphabetically by both authors and titles, and in the second volume alphabetically by subjects. Over nine hundred publishers were represented, and the two volumes aggregated 1490 large quarto double-column pages containing over 125,000 entries. A most valuable list of bibliographies is prefixed to the second volume to assist the student in prosecuting his researches beyond the province of the catalogue proper. This work is now out of print, the last sets (subscription price $25) having been sold at $60. A few surplus copies of the second volume (subjects, with bibliographical list), valuable by itself, can be had at $15.

The new AMERICAN CATALOGUE, 1876–1884, covers all books recorded between July 1, 1876, and June 30, 1884, and includes titles of over 18,000 books. Its practical value as an every-day working tool will almost exceed that of the original CATALOGUE. The edition is limited, and is nearly exhausted. The price is $15 for the present.

The ANNUAL AMERICAN CATALOGUE, 1886, gives full titles and descriptive notes of the books recorded in 1886, with index by author, title, and subject. Price $3.50.

THE PUBLISHERS' TRADE-LIST ANNUAL.

This volume is indispensable to any one who has any interest in the purchase or sale of books. It contains the latest catalogues of American publishers, arranged alphabetically by the names of the publishers; the Educational Catalogue, and the Index to the Books of the Year, whether looked for under author, title, or subject. Numerous cross-references are also added to facilitate the finding of books on similar subjects. Large octavo, about 3000 pages. Price, $2.00, with "Duplex Index."

COPYRIGHT: ITS LAW AND ITS LITERATURE.

A summary of the Principles and Law of Copyright, with especial reference to Books. By R. R. BOWKER. This volume briefly but comprehensively summarizes the principles, history, and present law of copyright, domestic and international. The copyright laws of the United States and Great Britain are printed in full, with a memorial of American authors to Congress and fac-similes of their signatures. The second part of the volume is a Bibliography of Literary Property: being a catalogue of sixty pages of books and Articles on the Copyright Question, compiled by THORVALD SOLBERG. One vol., 8vo, half leather. Price, $3.00.
